

BREVITIES.

If we subdue not our passions, they will subdue us.

Give work rather than alms to the poor. The former drives out indolence, the latter, industry.

"What's to become of me if you die?" asked an affectionate wife of her receding husband. "I don't know," he snapped out querulously. "It would look better in you to be thinking about what's to become of me!"

The editor of a religious paper says: "We consume millions of gallons of distilled spirits annually." We don't believe him. There is no doubt that he drinks to excess; but if he gets on the outside of two or three hundred gallons annually, he is doing as much as the rest of us.—Louisville Journal.

I delight to wander at my own sweet will across an unknown country; and when I come to some pretty, elm-shaded village, such as an English artist loves and on which any English eye would love to dwell, then I rest, and read, and saunter, until the advancing shadows remind me of retreat.—London Society.

A little girl, daughter of a clergyman, being left one day to "tend door," and obeying a summons of the bell, she found a gentleman on the steps who wished to see her father. "Father isn't in," said she, "but if it's anything about your soul I can attend to you. I know the whole plan of salvation."

An old lady, who doesn't come to town very often, but takes the papers, on entering a store the other day, said: "Why! do you keep this store yet? I thought you had gone out of the business; I hain't seen your name in the papers for ever so long, and I s'posed you had sold out."

This odd advertisement is from an English paper:

"My husband is out on a strike. He prefers that to work. He ain't any use to me. I must work to keep the children and self. His ten shillings goes in beer. I'll swap my husband while he's on a strike for a sewing-machine."

An old Frenchwoman may frequently be seen gazing intently in through the railings of St. Mark's churchyard. "Had she some dear friends interred there?" asked a benevolent old gentleman of her the other day. "No, monsieur; it is the dandelions I see that grow so finely there. What salads, if one could only get at them!"—N. Y. World.

A western editor, receiving an invitation to take tea with a lady friend, accepted. While at the table the lady observed that he had no spoon for his cup. "Is it possible," said she, "that I forgot to give you a spoon? I could not have made such a mistake." I have no spoon, madam," said the editor, rising from his seat, "and if you don't believe it you may search me."

REMEDY FOR CORNS. — Mr. Rose, a merchant of San Diego, announces that these creators of so much torment, can easily and surely be cured by applying gum arabic mucilage every evening on going to bed. He had them for nearly forty years, and tried nearly all the corn remedies in existence without relief, until he tried the above, which rapidly cured him in a few weeks.

An Irishman being recently on trial for some offense, pleaded "not guilty," and the jury being in the box, the State Solicitor proceeded to call Mr. Furkinson as a witness. With the utmost innocence Patrick turned his face to the Court and said, "Do I understand, your Honor, that Mr. Furkinson is to be a witness fornest me again?" The Judge said, dryly, "It seems so." "Well, then, your Honor, I plead guilty, sure; not because I am guilty, for I am as innocent as your Honor's suckling baby, but just on account of saving Mr. Furkinson's soul."

That is a clever Persian story about Mohammed Ali and the camels. A Persian died, having seventeen camels to be divided among his three sons—the eldest to have half, the second, a third, and the youngest a ninth. Of course the camels couldn't be divided in to fractions, so in despair, the brothers submitted their difficulty to Mahommed Ali. "Nothing easier," said the wise Ali, "I'll lend you another camel to make eighteen, and now divide them yourselves." The consequence was, each brother got from one ninth to one half of a camel more than he was entitled to, and Ali received his camel back again; the eldest brother getting nine camels, the second six, and the third two.
