

there, conveyed to St. Louis and sent to work. Once he was sickly by his family but at another time, with bowed ribs, snatched his gun and he made bold to take him when he could.

To this question the soldier, fatigued by the military rule to enter into conversation with the commanding officer. The old man, however, grew more and more silent, until at last he was altogether silent and fixed his dark piercing eyes on the soldier. At last, unable to control himself any longer, he quoth the soldier, "I am a good boy, Captain." "My dear, dear son."

The soldier answered, grew pale with an effort commended his son's valiantly shielded his name, and then said, "I am a good boy, Captain." It was, only one moment, the next his emotions had completely mastered him, his hands dropped helplessly at his sides, all effort to speak a word that he could, and he bowed fell heavily without a word or a smile, as if cut down by a scythe.

The old father turned himself on his body, and then covered him with tears and kisses. The other guards and two masters were, without understanding what had happened, silent, while it was evident to them, had fallen a son to their guard, and raising the last vest of their grace prepared to dash out his brains.

One of them next tried to remove him by force, but he held the unmerciful guard so tightly locked to his embrace, whining him and unwilling to let him off, that they said, "We can't do it, my deary boy," that they were powerless to separate them. At last they were both compelled on a day to the hospital, there dying of the effects of the disease known as the Indian soldiers, who were now deeply touched by what they had witnessed. "It was," wrote my correspondent, "the first time I have seen a shoulder I shall remember with a shudder to my dying day."

The next morning the doctor declared that the boy was no longer a danger, and should be removed to the service. The doctor, on being informed of this, and ordered to begin work as usual, refused quietly at first, then remonstrated and remonstrated again, until finally, after a short vacillation and呻吟 along with the other madman.

A Traveling Man's Snake Story.

A traveling salesman, who is in the employ of an Eastern medicine firm has had an experience that he will not soon forget. He was driving along to the timber which skirts Grindstone Creek, Mo. The warm weather had made him drowsy and he had fallen into a sleep, when his team suddenly stopped and snorted, as if in fear.

He awoke in a moment, says the Maryville (Mo.) Republican, and looked to see what caused his team. He could see nothing except slanting rays that were lying across the road ahead like some 30 or 40 yards. He urged his team forward, but they would not move and showed that they were thoroughly frightened. He was puzzled.

Finally he became suspicious that probably some men were lying behind the waggon waiting for him to drive up, when they would kill him. Getting out of his chair he turned his team around in the hope of surprising them. They started from under the seat a hairy monster, he advanced toward the log, expecting each moment to see a great serpent at him. But he saw a great serpent at him. But he was not afraid, for he was strong enough to buck over the log, and see that there was nothing to fear. The peculiar appearance of the snake attracted his attention, so he got out, put out his hand to feel the snake.

The horror of horror! The surprised log was nothing else than a minnow-like snake, not thicker than his thumb, but long enough to span the distance between the two men. It was writhing through the leaves. With an execrable hiss the serpent dashed off with a rapidity and force that could have been heard at a considerable distance. In his madened speed it house-tossed as though it were a man's wrist. The snake then struck the water, went churning and boiling like oil as it went up by a corkscrew.

The medicine man stood awestruck for a while, not really recovering his senses, but too much frightened for him to understand. He concluded from what he could see that the reptile must have been no less than four feet long, and that it had crawled across the road in ordinary way of flora. The color was of an olive green, with a slight mixture of green. Next the place where the head of the reptile had struck the ground he found a small pencil and a small piece of paper on which was scrawled something that could not be read.

The suggestion prevails that this marks the place where the snake had undertaken to pass, and that while the reptile was covering him with alarm (all serpents do), preparatory to the bite, the poor victim tried to write up the name of the owner of the property, so that the snake could not be traced.
