

A LEAP FOR LIBERTY.

BARING ESCAPE OF FOUR UNION PRISONERS NEAR CHARLESTON.

They jumped from a moving train, and fled through swamps and over mountains to Tennessee—Story of Capt. Drake, one of the number.

(Copyright, 1901, by American Press Association. This article is copyrighted.)

On the morning of Oct. 6, 1864, a party of four Union soldiers, who were prisoners of the Confederates, were taken to a point on the river, where they were to be sent to a camp. The soldiers, who were named Drake, and three others, decided to escape. They jumped from the train and fled through swamps and over mountains to Tennessee.

The escape of these four Union prisoners was a significant event during the Civil War. They managed to evade their captors and reach freedom in Tennessee. Their story is a testament to their courage and determination.

Drake, one of the four, was a captain in the Union Army. He was captured by the Confederates and held in a prison. He and his three companions decided to make a leap for liberty and escape.

The escape was a daring feat. They had to jump from a moving train and travel through difficult terrain. Despite the odds, they succeeded in reaching Tennessee and gaining their freedom.

The story of the escape of these four Union prisoners is a well-known tale in American history. It highlights the struggles and sacrifices of soldiers during the Civil War.

Drake's escape was particularly notable because he was a captain. His flight from captivity was a major blow to the Confederate forces.
