These are the Marquis of Cholmondeley, who, as hereditary great chamberlain, is re-sponsible for all the arrangements at Westminuter and the Duke of Norfolk Westminster for all the arrangements at Westminster and the Duke of Norfolk, who, as earl marshal, supervises the parade outside, with assistance from the Duke of Portland, master of the In consequence of the hereditorse. tary rights of these two officials the peeresses will hear the king's speech, ple. the commons will be crowded out and the commons will be crowed out out the masses outside, under the strenuous discipline of the military and police, will be lucky if they catch a glimpse of the charlot of George III, with a sight of the Flemish horses. The pressure from the smart set for entrance into the house of lords is tremenduous, but the peeresses are safe, though the heavens fall; and the commons, which will vote the civil list for the new reign, are to be represented only by the "speaker and mace-bearer." There are two curious points in connection with the ceremonies that will be observed at Westminster tomorrow. The sword of state will be carried by the postmaster general and Lord Salisbury will walk in the procession privy seal and not as prime minister. which is an office as yet unrecognized by the court etiquette. In the apart-ment of the palace of Westminster, known as the queen's robing room, the king will for the first time assume his regal robes of crimson silk velvet, edged with rows of gold lace and powdered ermine. The rich lace is from a design which is worn only by royal personages. The robe is lined throughout with ermine and is surmounted with a deep cape of the same fur. The cape and lining are composed of hun-dreds of carefully selected skins, adorned by several thousand spots of black fur. The train is several yards in length and is fastened at the neck by a gold cord, finished with bullion tassels. Queen Alexandria's robes are of similar material, but not of identical design. The stage coach was delivered at the royal mows last evening after having been thoroughly renovated. The huge charlot has been in large measure regilded and presents a most imposing appearance

CELEBRATION

New York, Feb. 12 .- The Republican club of the city of New York gave a banquet tonight at the Waldorf-Astoria in honor of Abraham Lincoln's memory. Gen. Henry E. Tremain presided. Among those at the guests' table were Cornelius N. Bliss, Whitelaw Reid, Senator J. M. Thurston, Senator Depew, Senator-elect Joseph R. Burton of Kansas, Judge John N. Baldwin, Senator Hanna. Attorney-General John W. Griggs, Senator N. B. Scott and Senator Edmund T. Bartlett.

While the dinner was served in the large ballroom another dinner was being served in the Astor gallery to about seventy-five women, invited guests of members of the club. When the speechmaking began the women filed into the ower tier of boxes. Senators Depew, Thurston and Han-a were given an ovation on entering the hall. A letter of regret from Robert T. Lincoln was received and Gen. Tremain introduced Judge John N. Baldwin of Nebraska as the orator of the evening. Judge Baldwin said in

'It is said that there is no longer a government fashioned after the pre-cepts and principles of Abraham Lincoln; that the declaration that all men are created equal is unheeded; that capital and labor are opposed and uncommunicating; that manufacturers are gorged with the larder of a plundering tariff; that it is an age of mammon and machinery; that the existing financial system is a conspiracy against the human race; that imperialism and mili-tarism are the spirit of the times; and that forts are conveniently located so that a standing army can suppress by force discontent among laboring peo-

"If these conditions do not really ex-ist, but by certain peculiar practices, prophecies and platforms are made so to appear to 6,000,000 voters we have a result energies, which also forbodes social anomaly which also forbodes peril to the state.' Judge Baldwin referred to the last national campaign and ridiculed the Democratic party for its part in it. Continuing, he said: "That such a party with such a leader and with just simplicity enough to pretend and just truth enough to deceive, could thus be sanctioned by so large a proportion of the American people almost passes be-Judge Baldwin continued: "The poor, the discontented and distressed can safely leave their cause in the hands of those who would endeavor at least to determine it according to the prin-ciples of Abraham Lincoln. The same spirit of civil liberty that animated Washington in his struggle to make this land free and Lincoln to make every man free, is today moving ove the waters of our governmental life. It recognizes no limitations and has no frontiers. It will move as easily and so surely over an ocean as it has over state, treaty and boundary lines."

DEATH MASK OF NAPOLEON.

It is Rescued from an Ash Barrel by Col. Julian Scott, the Well Known Artist.

It Was Taken at St. Helena, and Formerly Belonged to the Spooner* Collection.

Plainfield, N. J., Feb. 13 .- From an ash barrel that had been consigned to a dump, Col. Julian Scott, the wellknown artist, has rescued a death mask of Napoleon, which was taken at St. Helena after the death of the great general. The mask is a mate to the one highly prized in the collection of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, which was presented by Mrs. Astor.

The mask found by Col. Scott belonged to the Spooner collection of valuable works of art when the owner lived in North Plainfield. After his death it fell into hands who did not know its value, and gradually drifted to one side until it fell into the ash barrel, and was found just in the nick of time by Col. Scott. Although some-what damaged now, Col. Scott believes that be will be able to restore it to its original value.

It is a Portrait of Little Prince Carlos by Velasquez.

Boston, Feb. 13 .-- The Boston Museum of Fine Arts now possesses one of the finest examples of the old masters in this country. It is a Velasquez, a porthat of little Prince Carlos and his dwarf playmate, painted about 1632 when the son of Philip IV was two and a half years old. The picture is hung in the Lawrence room of the museum, carefully railed off.

The reported price paid by the board of directors of the museum is $80,000. The selling price was adverticed at $90. 600, but though the directors will not say what was paid, it is understood that they secured a slight reduction. Gen. Charles G. Loring, director of the museum, said: 'I have no hesitation in declaring it the finest picture in this country. We secured it from Castle Howard, the seat of the Earl of Carlisle, in the north of England, where it has hung for 150
