

Noted Alienist Blames Luxuries For Insanity

DR. ALLAN McLANE HAMILL, noted alienist, is disposed to believe the "emotional insanity" known for homicidal crime, according to an interview in the Philadelphia Public Ledger, is said.

"As most of the cases, the American case was one of the earliest American cases, and even in those early days the public mind was not so much interested in the subject as it is now. Dr. Hamill, a popular lecturer of the Civil War, and an eminently sane man, after having watched the street and observed the emotional insanity, is so much interested in the subject that he has written a book on the subject, which is now being published by the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"In this state," said Dr. Hamill, "the case of the man who killed the woman, and the case of the man who killed the woman, are the only two cases of emotional insanity which have been recorded in the history of the world. The case of the man who killed the woman, and the case of the man who killed the woman, are the only two cases of emotional insanity which have been recorded in the history of the world.

which is now being published by the Philadelphia Public Ledger, is said.

"It is really a legal compromise with the public. The public mind is not so much interested in the subject as it is now. Dr. Hamill, a popular lecturer of the Civil War, and an eminently sane man, after having watched the street and observed the emotional insanity, is so much interested in the subject that he has written a book on the subject, which is now being published by the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

the man who killed the woman, and the case of the man who killed the woman, are the only two cases of emotional insanity which have been recorded in the history of the world.

"About this time, and until 1875, there were a number of murders of the same kind. Judge Parker, in the case of the man who killed the woman, is the only case of emotional insanity which has been recorded in the history of the world.

SUPPERFUGUE FOR LAWYERS.

"In this city I was connected in a minor capacity with two early important cases of this kind, one of which was the trial of McFarland for the murder of Richardson, which created much attention at the time, and which resulted, quite improperly in McFarland's acquittal. The term 'emotional insanity,' as understood by the public, is not recognized by self-respecting alienists, because it is difficult to imagine how a man can be sane one moment, become insane, and then after the commission of the crime, as is usually alleged, and I think it is the disposition nowadays to consider this defense as the best excuse for the crime, and to take the law into one's hands. As has been said, it is a term invented by unscrupulous lawyers to save the jury a safe bridge upon which to pass from the disreputable technical duty to the acknowledgment of their duties, when the accused has killed some one who, according to the common sense of opinion, ought to have been killed."

"There is something rather interesting about the mental attitude of an individual under such circumstances as to his conception of his official rights. I have often noticed that there is a singular lack of sincere inquiry and consistency in the husband's motive for revenge, and there is usually a great deal more behind the facts as they first burst upon the community than are known. The husband who kills a paramour too often does it in a cowardly fashion, either shooting him in the back from behind a wall or in the dark. These of two apt to be an element of cowardice in the way it is done that robs it of the fine drama of feeling with which it is colored by the lawyers for the defense. Frequently the cases that lead up to these tragedies are known by the husband long before, and even sometimes confided to his impression is that there exists a sort of inexplicable vanity, an exaggerated egotism, that impairs the sane attitude of mind which should be the basis of the man who shoots another man on his wife's account.

"There is another strange evolution of modernism, quite as remarkable and related in its way as the husband's motive for killing. The community, looking back to the laws of barbarism, adopts the husband's assumed property rights in the wife to his moral obligation of a far more complicated problem than they realize. Following exactly with these cases depends upon the dramatic skill with which the husband presents his story, the manner in which he performs his duty of emotion. He may be a blunder in the face of his attempt to impress upon the public his character and rage that they discover an element of the ludicrous in the very heart of an actual tragedy.

"Such a man may often neglect his duty, and he may be a blunder in the face of his attempt to impress upon the public his character and rage that they discover an element of the ludicrous in the very heart of an actual tragedy. He may be a blunder in the face of his attempt to impress upon the public his character and rage that they discover an element of the ludicrous in the very heart of an actual tragedy.

"You may ask what all this has to do with emotional insanity, and the commission of murder, and my reply must be that where there is an extreme which feeds upon sensation and separates itself from sanity and a cool exercise of judgment, we may expect more or less moral decline.

DANGERS IN MODE OF LIVING.

"Time and space do not permit me to draw the lessons which must be apparent to those who live in this era of extravagance and luxury, especially in big cities, where home feeling is getting to be more and more a thing of the past. The life in boarding houses, flats, and restaurants breeds unrest and discontent, and affords opportunity for moral lapses which can only have one tendency.

"A wise procedure, first inaugurated by the United States District of Columbia, in the Schneider case, some years ago, and later more perfectly brought about by the Hon. Justice Warren W. Foster, of the general sessions, provides for the appointment of a commissioner, alienist, who should receive testimony and give an opinion as to the alleged insanity of a defendant at the time of the commission of the act, as well as at the present time, and report. The decision of this commission may send the individual to a penal institution for the insane, or he may be put on trial, should the charge of alleged insanity be unfounded. By this method the community would not only be saved from disgusting details, such as were poured out in the 'Flawless' case, but the victim would be spared the fact to him, when he took the law into his own hands and killed the paramour. It was properly alleged that his act was an insane one. This is a very different thing from the instances where individuals, after receiving such information, wait weeks and months, going about their business and holding ordinary relations with the woman, or even indulging in litigation.

COWARDICE OF MURDERERS.

"There is something rather interesting about the mental attitude of an individual under such circumstances as to his conception of his official rights. I have often noticed that there is a singular lack of sincere inquiry and consistency in the husband's motive for revenge, and there is usually a great deal more behind the facts as they first burst upon the community than are known. ## STUDENT HOBO CLASS PUT UPON THE GRILL

HOBOS in the schools, especially in the high schools and universities, was the subject discussed yesterday by Dean J. O. Reed of the University of Michigan before the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools at the Auditorium. Dean Reed at once established his right to speak on school hoboism by declaring that he had taught both the "hobo" boy with the check of tan and the "college" boy with the check of blue.

"A student in the high schools, who is a subject of 'hoboism' is at the bottom of every outbreak of disorder," Dean Reed said. "He may be either an athlete or a fop or even both combined. He usually excels in dancing and other social functions and maintains toward the principal an attitude of armed neutrality, or, possibly, of open insurrection, according as he feels himself safe in assuming the one or the other."

"Such a student gives gum or tobacco, as his social standing dictates
