"I often in recent years in the management of business I have helped build up," said Mr. Carnegie, "because I have great pride in it and further reasons than my capital in it. It requires direct employment. It requires many men with steady work at good wages. I don't know of any form of philanthropy as beneficial as this. I have not taken money out of the resources for investment in outside enterprises. I never have had any other reason than to come to you beyond that required for public service has been devoted to public uses. I've no housing man and never shall."

There was no excitement, no shouting, and trouble as a serious character is anticipated. The Brooks people evidently intend to bring in a force of men sufficient to run the works.

The strike, which lasts a month, has been called in the oil field department, refusing to work under contract, continuing to work under contract, demanding arbitration treatment. A lack of oilists made it necessary to lay off men in other departments, and now about one thousand are out of work. The Brooksites have organized a Philadelphia men to take the strikers' places, and brought them yesterday of a special train. Yesterday President Chapman received information that Brooks had been made available and that he must meet him and the protection of Sheriff Jones was asked. John, where but the Lord. Once the natives heard the things preached in them in their own tongue. He relates the results of their visits to various Maori villages, and how some of them were converted and others destined to be baptized. It was in the Hawke bay district, in the north island, that he made his first speech in the Maori language, a knowledge of which he had gradually acquired during the earlier part of his ministry. He returned home upon his release by way of England, where he squatted for about three months. He left thankful that he had been accounted worthy to go with the Lord's work and amanuensis to those who knew not those principles which I believed would lead unto eternal life. In the course of his preaching he used to go into the native huts and speak with the natives, who would be amazed at his presence and obtain selected few.
