he was compelled to find a bed elsewhere, which he did, muttering to himself: "I'll tame her yet."

He laid all night forming a plan to bring her to submission. In the morning, he asked her to walk into the study; and there they renewed their fierce quarrel, during which Mrs. S. called her husband, a heartless, brainless fellow, who married her for her money. To which the doctor replied, by calling her a low, vulgar woman, who was only too glad to marry a professional gentleman and author, to enable her to enter society. After which she toyed with her fan, and finally pulled the bell-cord, and ordered the servant who answered it to bring her carriage to the door.

"Where are you going?" demanded the doctor.

"To ride, sir," replied the amiable Mrs. Strahan.

"I'll go with you, if you please."

"But I do not please."

"Then I choose to go."

"Very well, then, you go alone. I cannot go with you."

"You cannot go unless I accompany you, madam."

"Cannot?"

"Cannot madam."

"We'll see."

"Well, we will see."

The doctor walked out of the room, locked the door, put the key in his pocket, and left the house.

She did not sit down and burst into a flood of tears, but waited patiently for the servant to return whom she had sent for the carriage. When he returned, she told him, through the keyhole, to return the horses to the stable, and place the ladder against the study window. The ladder was placed according to directions, and a turkey with oysters and pastry were brought up to her. The ladder was then removed, and everything was prepared for the re-appearance of her husband.

Near the middle of the afternoon the doctor returned home, stepped softly through the hall towards the door, peeped through the keyhole, expecting to see a striking picture of humility and contrition.

Judge of his surprise, then, when he saw Mrs. S. sitting before his long reading table; on her right hand his bell-metal mortar, in which she was roasting his mammoth specimen apples, sweet potatoes, and her turkey. Near her stood his water bath in which she was cooking oysters, and she occasionally stirred them with his spatula; on the table stood one of the bottles of wine which had been left from the previous night's revelry, which the lady, for the want of a champagne opener, had deprived of its neck with a wedge wood pestle, and using a four ounce graduate for a wine glass; she had cut up champagne baskets for firewood with an Indian tomahawk. On the left hand stood the doctor's writing desk which she had broken open, and scattering on the desk were tender missives of his earlier love flames, manuscript pages of tales and sketches, unpublished odes, and unpaid tailor bills, while the lady sat reading first a sweet love letter, then an ode on Napoleon, and so on, throwing them page after page into the fire. Thus the husband's brainwork and wooden curiosities were made to cook the dinner.
