By Beck, to prohibit officers and employes of the United States from contributing money for political purposes. Referred.

Beveral private bills were passed. Debate ensued on the proposition to equalize navy chaplains pay with that of army chaplains.

Plumb asked if Vance would agree to have the pay of army chap. agree to have the pay of army chap lains reduced to the navy standard.

Nance said he did not want to see Pendleton said the question of civil service had been submitted to civil service had been submitted to the people in the recent election. They spoke in no low or uncertain tone. The expanditures of the government this fiscal year, of $102,000,000, or nearly $9 per head for every man, woman and child in the United States. The money is probably more than that appropriated during the first forty years of the existence of the government. The existence of the government. The method of administration by repub-licans made it possible for demo-crats and other citizens, who prized their country higher than party, to elect a democratic State ticket in other three would certainly be seat-other three would certainly be seated by the next House. Civil service had welded the whole of its employees into a great political machine, whose efforts at least twice within a short period of our history robbed the people of fair results in the presidential election. Underlying the principles of the bill was officers of the government in trust for the people that the performance or duties is in the interests of the people, with no excuse for the anistence of the office, or payment of the salary, except it is necessary for the welfare of the people; that every superfluous office should be abolished and that of incompetent officeholders dismissed; that the employment of missed; that the employment of two where one will suffice is rob-bery; and that if salaries are so high as to justify levying forced contributions of from two to ten per cent., they are too high and ought to be reduced. The bill is designed as a method of applying to candidates for public employment Jeffersonian tests of fidelity, honesty, and capacity. It deals only with Departments in Washington, and custom house and other public offices, who give employment to more than 50 persons; the number of such offices did not exceed 35, and the whole number of employees to whom the bill would apply is not more than 10,000. The bill did not touch at all the questions of removals. Some gentlemen were disposed to wait till after the next President is elected before passing a bill to reform the civil service in the hope that a change in the adminis-tration would give a fair share of the offices to the democrats, but the democratic party might not elect the next President and he believed that it would not unless its re-presentatives in Congress did two things. First, respond to the de-mands made up n the party in the present condition of probation;

second, to disarm the great body of officials, who, as a great disciplined army go forth to pervest and control elections. In conclusion Penleton said he believed the passage of this measure would hasten the day of the democratic triumph, but even if he thought otherwise he would still urge it, because much as he loved the democratic party he loved his country more. Allison replied briefly to Pendle ton whatever else might be said of the appropriations at last session they were recommended by mem-bers of the committee of both par-ties, with substantial funanimity, and it was not fair for Senator Penand it was not fair for Senator Pendleton to attempt to make party capital by charging the republicans alone with the responsibility. The democrats were responsible equally with the republicans for the great increase in the pension roll. As to the river and harbor bill, 23 democrats voted for it, and only three against, while only 16 republican senators voted for it, 14 against, yet the attempt was now made to have it appear the republicans alone are responsible for appropriations forcad upon them by democratic als colleague's manner of advocatit was designed to persuade his democratic associates to support the cause of the civil service reform. He hoped the effort to convert them assignment of Charles Sales, and Canse of the civil service reform. He hoped the effort to convert them would be successful, but he feared his colleagues would find this, like and the reforms, must be made, it at all, by the regulation party. By Hale, a substitute for section 3, providing that the commission shall set in Washington, and at one or more places in each state and territory where examinations take place; to designate a suitable number of persons, not less than three, in the official service of the United States, to be members of the board of examiners, so as to make it reasonably convenient and inexpensive for applicants to attend and hold examinations at least once a year in any stats or territory where applicants are to be examined.

The first broke out on the fourth floor, where about 100 operatives were at work. Those on the fifth floor were exposed to the most danger. No fire escape, and the only means many had to avoid destruction by the fire was the use of an outside hoisting rope, which reached only to the second floor. All coming down this had to fall from the second floor to the ground. Several were burned by the flomes belining out of the windows; others belining out of the windows; others and waste land; by Mr. Townsend, were injured, some by falling and mense agricultural facilities of this country, and by Mr. Morehead, of Des Moines, Iowa, on hay, and all the papers were discussed.

The evening session was chiefly devoted to a rather heated debate on a protective tariff resolution of fered by a mamber. It was finally.
