

High School Students Hunt Books Laid Away Long Ago.

It may not be generally known that Salt Lake High school seniors-to-be are given examinations in grammar, spelling, and penmanship. This is usually done towards the end of the year, and is a prerequisite to graduation. The subjects are covered in the same style that they are in examinations given to eighth grade graduates. The school day is a source of much worry to high school students, for the "exams" ask questions about things to which no student has been exposed for four years, spelling, arithmetic and writing are required. When the seniors are given their examinations, they are given special attention and the other basic subjects are given less attention. Principal Eaton announced that they would draw the covered envelope with the big seal and wide ribbon must be torn off the top. The seniors must come down out of their seats and why "a" equals "a" if "a" is a pack of potatoes, etc., so on and so forth, there was fear in every heart. Many a wise senior from the past and grew frigid in his seat as he thought of the things over. Fair means consumed the midnight oil and two pounds of fudge nightly while pouring over dust covered old books which had not seen light for four years, books which defied discovery for hours, books which mother had said "must come down out of that closet for the place is a disgrace to a whole family, and what's the use of keeping them anyhow? You'll never get them again!"

When the seniors were called to the "old time" hall, they were told that Big Sister and Big Brother had been laid away in the fire place. In Big Sister's grammar grade books were found which his first girl gave him on the day at recess. How carefully he had pressed them. That was four years ago and the school day information had been laid away, but Big Brother had the old geography containing the flowers in the attic. Mother wanted the old geography, but yielding to pleadings, he laid the books undisturbed. Big Sister wanted her old books kept in "souvenirs" of early school days, she pleaded. Were flowers in her old books?

All these notes, which he had written in these old days. She and he sat together and read from the same book, and it was so easy to "fool" the teacher. Estate after her think they were doing in study when they were really drawing enigmas. He once covered the

CROP CONDITIONS IMPROVED.

Apple Growing in the Bear River Valley—News Briefs.

Special Correspondence. Brigham City, May 22.—The recent heavy rain throughout this part of the state improved farming conditions very materially. In the Bear River valley, about half of the beets failed to come up on account of the dry season. In the Curlew valley the dry farmers were discouraged, as all the grain was apparently drying up. Now everything looks bright and prospects for a heavy crop are very good. The Bear River valley is fast becoming transferred from grain and beet fields to immense orchards. Hundreds of acres have been planted into apple trees this season. Experience of the last few years has proven that for quality apples grown in that valley cannot be surpassed, and the soil is of such a character that the fruit is of the best. The acre is something wonderful. The Bear River valley is no doubt destined to become one of the leading apple belts in the country.
