CLUB CHAT.

The fall meetings of the Daughters of the Revolution have been resumed. Monday, at 6:30 p. m. the members met at Mrs. E. B. Wells' office, Templeton building. The decorations were sunflowers in blue vases and jardiniere, to carry out the society colors. The topic was given by Regent Clarissa S. Williams. Subject "Four Causes of the American Revolution." This interesting phase of American history was given in a charming manner by Mrs. Williams. Her style is simple, clear and strong. An important letter was received from Sarah E. Hunt, secretary of the general society, asking a statement of the Utah state society to be placed in a box under the monument at Valley Forge. Mrs. E. B. Wells gave some interesting incidents about President McKinley.

The society expressed sympathy for Mrs. McKinley in her terrible bereavement and appointed a committee to send a telegram expressing the sentiment of the society.

Mrs. George H. Horne invited the society to meet at her home at the October meeting. The invitation was accepted. The following is the telegram sent to Mrs. McKinley:

"The Utah state society, Daughters of the Revolution, extend to you their heartfelt sympathy in this dark hour, and earnestly pray that God's loving light may enfold and protect you, and be throughout all the years to come a comfort and blessing."

CLARISSA SMITH WILLIAMS, Committee—
ALICE MERRILL HORNE, EMMELINE B. WELLS.

The Daughters of the Pioneers will meet on Tuesday, the 24th, at the Woman's Exposition office, Mrs. Farnsworth's illness making it impossible for the meeting to take place at her residence as previously announced. The honorary members of the society, and all daughters of pioneers, whether members of the society or not, are invited to be present.

The music section will meet Wednesday morning, September 26th, at 10 o'clock, at the club house. Mendelssohn will be the composer for the day, and the program will be given by Mrs. F. Reed, Mrs. Reahy, Mrs. Alvah Lewis, Mrs. Loomis, Miss Kimball, Mrs. Club women will read with interest the address of Mrs. Hennrich, former president of the General Federation, made at Chicago at the open meeting of the Working Women's association of America. This represents the much-talked-of housemaid's union, and Mrs. Hennrich told the large assembly of domesticates that she favored their organization, because with it would surely come a union of household employees. This would bring the domestic-service question before the two classes most interested for rational and mutual discussion, and must work out its best solution. It is reported that the audience received the word of a possible mistress' union with considerable surprise. Mrs. Hennrich paid a tribute to the domesticates of America, who number, she said, 1,500,000. "Over half of these," said she, "are foreign born, and we have taught them all they know. They are the best domesticates in the world—the quickest to learn, the quickest to work, and the best to handle." Miss Adams, of Hull House, another speaker, also endorsed the union, because it would elevate domestic service to a trade. "One of the elements that has kept back your craft," said Miss Adams, "is the fact that the domestic is isolated. She does not know the hours, the labor, or the wage of the domestic in the next block. Isolation tends to retard education." This speaker believed, too, that the new society would soonest and best bring about the necessary adjustment of household work. "Every housekeeper will admit that this must come. There is a life outside of labor, and the girl must be given a definite time to live this life. The girl in the household is given an evening out. She would rather have all her evenings out, and then work overtime, if necessary. By organization, and discussing conditions, the girls find out what to demand without upsetting the household. Organization will give power and a feeling of right in a rational request. Both sides have need of broader experience as to what is reasonable in hours and wages and other considerations."

A recent accession to the membership list of the General Federation is the Women's Auxiliary of the American Park and Outdoor Art association, whose president is Mrs. Herman J. Hall, chairman of the art committee of the general federation. The affiliation of the Outdoor Art association with the large body of club women is wise and should be productive of useful results.

The work of the many town and village improvement associations will be greatly benefited by the cooperation of this society, whose scope is wide, and whose development promises an important influence. Its special aim is to stimulate local improvement in cities and towns, to urge and aid in the reservation of land for public parks and breathing spaces, and in the improvement of the same, to cooperate with all movements and societies aiming toward a truer municipal art, and to arouse individual interest, especially among the women, in the improvement and embellishment of private grounds.

A late enterprise of the Texas State Federation is the placing of boxes in postoffices throughout the state, in which persons may put magazines they have read, to be passed on to the farming population. From its organization in 1897, the Texas Federation has been active in the distribution of literature. At its first annual meeting the establishment of public libraries was selected as its special aid, at the same time, exclusive work. The result of two years effort, in which the people of the state cordially cooperated, showed forty public libraries, four traveling libraries in active operation, and the gift from Andrew Carnegie of over $200,000 for public libraries in the state. This excellent progress has been continued, and the sentiment of the state grows in favor of the enactment of library state and municipal library laws. The federation is pledged to persistent effort in this direction, and hopes for early legislation creating a State Library commission to encourage the founding of public libraries, commissioners to be unsalaried. The roster of the Federation includes 141 clubs, representing a membership of between 3,000 and 4,000 women.

The many flourishing chapters of the Society of the Children of the American Revolution indicate the interest and value of the organization. It was founded and is under the guidance of the D. A. R., and is, indeed, practically a junior branch of that national society. Its annual meetings are held in Washington in the week in February when occurs the gatherings of the Daughters and are under the auspices of the latter. The D. A. R. do not admit members under the age of eighteen and the age limit of the Sons of the Revolution is twenty-one years. Membership in the Children's Society is retained usually till an age permitting entrance in one of the other branches of the society is reached. The objects of the junior chapters are very similar in each chapter, viz., to study American history, celebrate patriotic anniversaries, to help to mark historic spots and save places of colonial association, and to foster love of country and the American flag.

The committee of the G. F. W. C. on the "Industrial Problem as it Affects Women and Children," whose chairman is Mrs. Florence Kelly, carried out its purpose actively through the summer months. Its efforts to interest the federated clubs and arouse them to a careful consideration of this important department of women's work are proving efficient. In a circular the committee sets forth as its object, "to bring to the attention of the clubs some of the ways in which the industrial problems affect women and children, and some of the ways in which we may affect the industrial problem." The committee furnishes an extended bibliography and offers a long, suggestive list of topics suitable for club consideration. It especially urges state federations to include the general subject in the program of their annual meetings, and to appoint standing committees for investigation of state conditions and the spread of knowledge in the matter among state clubs.

WILLIAM M'KINLEY OUR MARTYRED PRESIDENT.

smoked moderately, but did not use intoxicating liquors. He was clean of speech as he was of character. He was a model husband, a devoted son, and brother and in all the walks of life he carried himself as to leave the impress of a noble character. He was strong physically and mentally. He had no decided and energetic step. While his face had a certain pallor under excitement, it habitually wore the fine glow of a man in rugged health. He was frequently seen upon the streets of Washington and was not hedged about by the usual pride and circumstance of rulers. He was the most reasonable, the most accommodating of men. No citizen was too lowly, no cause too poor to enlist his sympathy, but with all this he was a business man. He knew the value of time. He would have been unable to accomplish the work for which he was chosen if he had failed to husband his resources, and so it was that he got out of every man associated with him the best and most that was in him. He did nothing himself that others should do for him. His cabinet officers were appointed for a purpose—to administer the affairs of their great departments. He required of them a strict account of stewardship; he did not interfere with them in the discharge of their onerous duties; he raised them into consultation; he required a showing of their books; he drew upon them for a strengthening of administrative policies; he relied upon them for material and support; his office was a model in the dispatch of public business. A keen judge of men, he surrounded himself with efficient helpers. From an ordinary government establishment, with very indifferent methods, the executive mansion became one of the most practical and helpful of public offices. A position in the office of the President of the United States is today a post of signal honor, highly prized among the thousands of such places in the federal service.

Only the sterling qualities of his character helped him in the dark hours of personal suffering which came to him during the last few months of his life. All public men train themselves in the hard school of self-control, but none was more successful than William McKinley. The nation still remembers the calm, patient man who watched for many hours at the bedside of his wife and whose unbending will smothered every outward trace of the emotion which tore at his heart strings. Even in that recent tragic moment when he had been felled by the assassin that grand moral strength of his enabled him to endure pain with a calm face. It was he who tried to reassure his friends, although his life blood was even then ebbing away. Such was the stuff of which our third martyred President was made.

CUBA'S BEAUTY QUEEN.

MISS ALFONSO

MISS MENDOZA

The above freakishly executed photograph affords a comparative study in Cuban feminine beauty. Miss Silvia Alfonso Aldama, now on a visit to this country, is the beauty queen of Cuba legitimately elected by a majority of the people of Cuba with all the seriousness of an American presidential election. Miss Mendoza, the unsuccessful candidate for the high honor, was defeated by 6,000 votes. Miss Aldama is dark, Miss Mendoza a wonderful blonde. By the above halftone American judges may be able to endorse or reverse the decision of the Cuban people.
