American Genius for Tyranny.

The genius for tyranny in the American people is something amazing to those who have had an opportunity of comparing our people with other civilized communities. It is true that we came by this trait honestly, from our ancestors, and we have improved our opportunities since with great success. It will be noted that the Pilgrim fathers, who fled their homes because they where not allowed to worship God in their own disagreeable way, signalized their arrival on these shores by burning and hanging all who differed from them in religious belief. The famous Huguenots were not much better. Indeed that religion which carries the Bible in one hand and sword or faggot in the other differs so essentially from the religion of Christ that tyranny, intolerance and persecution are the natural fruit.

We have ceased to be religious even in the pilgrim sense of religion, but the traits instilled by that morbid condition remain in full force. "The insolence of office," spoken of by Shakespeare as one of the great evils of life, is felt by the American citizen in a way Shakespeare never dreamed of. And the lower the office the more offensive the insolence. A cabinet officer is so impudent when dealing with a private citizen that he ceases to be a gentleman, if he ever were one, while a committee in Congress will make the star chamber or the inquisition respectable. As one descends the scale the insolence increases. The head of a bureau is a ruffian, while the chief of a division would make an overseer of slaves blush.

We once had a Venetian door in one of our departments rudely slammed to in our face. Knowing that the messenger stood on the other side and could hear every word we said, we turned to the little crowd waiting outside and quietly remarked:

"Gentlemen, we must not mind these things. Courtesy is a very expensive article. Our Government is poor. It cannot afford to employ gentlemen as messengers while penitentiary convicts, such as this fellow, can be had for what they steal."

The messenger was polite enough to us after those few observations.

Of the same sort is our police. Arrests are made with clubs, and any remonstrance is followed by a sound beating.

How different is all this in Europe, where the genius for tyranny does not exist to the same extent. We remember one bright moonlight night in Cologne we were awakened by a drunken fellow under our window, who, between shouts, songs and stump-speaking in German, that sounds dreadful, made the night hideous. We threw up the window and contributed a series of empty bottles to the row, and were feeling around for the bootjack, when the police intervened, and, to our amazement, entered into a discussion with the inebriated German. After a time the intoxicated individual walked away in one direction and the policeman in another. Our genius for tyranny was outraged. We wanted to see that fellow who had disturbed our slumbers incontinently knocked on the head.

Again, at the races near Wiesbaden, we drove our carriage to an eligible point of view. A policeman approached us, touched his hat and said something in German. Our driver seized his lines and drove back to a line of carriages. We asked Doctor Martin what the policeman said:

"He called our attention to the fact that we were out of line and might interfere with the races, and he asked us, if we pleased, to get into line again."—D. P. in Washington Capital.

IS IT CONTAGIOUS?—A friend sends us the following: Whooping cough seems at present to be the rage among the young folks. A young man who considered himself to be invulnerable against the reading cough has been sadly deceived. The other evening he called upon a young lady and learned that she and her mother both had the whooping cough, and a young lady visitor also had it. Undismayed he took his seat, remarking that both his aunt and grandmother had the whooping cough, and that he was not afraid of catching it, having already had it thre times. He then commenced rocking a cradle in which was a sleeping child. It awoke and began coughing, then the two young ladies commenced coughing, and after continuing it for fifteen minutes, the young man joined the coughing party, and whooped as heartily as any of them.—Vallejo (Cal.) Independent.
