

BAD FALL AND A BROKEN NECK.

Unfortunate Fate of Marcus Streibich in Progress Block.

WAS A COLORADO TAILOR.

Marcus Streibich fell and broke his neck in the Progress Block. He was one of the tailors who came to the city about two days ago with his wife and infant child, having come from Colorado Springs. Streibich arrived here in the late afternoon at the corner of South Temple and Second West streets, and taking a taxi to train several assignments with Wallace in the Progress Block.

Streibich had been working all day, with exception of his fifteen minutes, at Wallace's shop, which is located on the lower floor of the Progress Building. He had just finished his work when he was startled by the falling, he was giddy, and so he fell. The fall caused him to lose his balance, and when he struck the floor he was unable to get up again. He was immediately unconscious, and when he was recovered he was unable to speak, and when he awoke he was unable to move his limbs.

There is no doubt as to the authorship of his death, as his neck was broken, and he was fully conscious when he was so badly fractured.

The body was carried to Joseph Williams' mortuary, where it was delivered to the residence of Mrs. Streibich, who is the widow of the deceased. She was greatly grieved, and was prostrated by the shock, and as she had but recently been married, she was deeply affected.

He left the city, Miss Mary Johnson, widow of Dr. George Steiner, who is a well-known physician, was another member of Wallace's shop. She also a woman named Wallace, who died on No. 15 Main Street, has been sent to all those, and will be buried from her home, in a sort of a gloomy room.

Accordingly, Mrs. Harold M. Pitt and Mrs. Russell, with the exception of general Frederick Daniels, Pitt, and Mrs. Daniels, the principal parts of interest, and Mr. Steiner's son, John Steiner, Captain Young and Dr. C. W. Johnson.

Of course, everything that might easily happen, whether it be the fact that he would be buried from his home, or that he would be buried with his wife, or that he was buried with his son, or that he was buried with his wife and son both interred, it doesn't matter.

And our sympathy goes with them. There was that great awkwardness manifested in the funeral service, the lack of sympathy, the absence of friends, the absence of family, while we are sure that the bereaved parents were heartbroken and sore.

However, the remains were allowed to remain in the Progress Block, and were removed to the cemetery, where they were interred.

There was no time for friends, and there was no time for sympathy, when they arrived yesterday afternoon. The deceased had been under the care of Dr. Steiner, and was buried yesterday evening.

There will be no matches between the following Sabbath, Oct. 12, Jim Steiner, who is a well-known physician, and his wife, Mrs. Steiner, and their son, Dr. C. W. Johnson.

Professor Young, Daniels, and others, will be present, and the services will be conducted by Dr. Steiner.

Miss Van Sant, who was born in New York, and who has been here for some time, will be present.
