There is no doubt but that the want of success of the present campaign has been caused in great part by the absence of a frank co- operation among the higher offi- cers. It is openly stated that rival- ries and jealousies have in great part contributed to the want of success and have been directly the cause of the Little Big Horn mas- sacre. It would be well if Congress would investigate the whole mat- ter. Some curious and important light would be thrown on the sin- ster events of the campaign, and the responsibility of the gross mis- management and blundering that has marked the operations from the beginning to the present day would be fixed on the proper par- ties.
