CLUB CHAT.

The Woman's club of Tacoma, Wash., has established a rest room for working women, and hopes ultimately to expand it into a residence club. Most of the furniture was donated by club members and their friends, and for the present, at least, the members will give their services, one or two being in attendance every day. A simple luncheon will be served at noon.

The Rev. Olympia Brown is quoted as saying: "When the woman's cause dies out a little we will be able to rouse more interest in our equal suffrage associations." Many of the old woman suffrage leaders have been so disappointed as to deplore the club movement and to express the belief that it marks a step backward in the progression of woman. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Club women are not all suffragists by any means, but they have learned to respect each other's opinions on the subject and whenever the matter comes up for discussion it has a hearing. Club life has helped to prepare women for citizenship when it is finally given them, but it has done a much better work in preparing the public mind for the change. Women who would not have been permitted a few years ago, to take the shortest railway journey, except under male escort, now go off in their club specials to state and national federations, and there are no objections. The hotels are delighted to entertain club women, governors and mayors are always ready to open their conventions, and the masculine public is generous in applauding the ease and dignity with which the meetings are conducted. Lastly, the interest in public affairs which has grown out of club life has demonstrated that women can be intelligent citizens, useful citizens, conscientious citizens. It will be long before legislators are converted to woman suffrage as a right; it may not be long before they are convinced that it is expedient.

The Wisconsin State federation has established a scholarship fund from which any deserving woman in the state may borrow to fit herself for a profession. The beneficiaries are not limited as to the college or training school they attend. They may take the money to any state or even to Europe. The money borrowed is to be paid back in small installments without interest.

There appears to be some difference of opinion among the members of the Daughters of the American Revolution concerning the action of the Manhattan chapter in becoming affiliated with the State Federation of Women's clubs. Mrs. Charles W. Fairbanks, president-general of the society, is said to have declared the action unconstitutional, and it has been rumored that the executive board is discussing the advisability of disciplining the offending chapter. Mrs. William C. Story, regent of the chapter, declares that the executive board was kept informed of the intention and the action of the chapter. The national vice-president's advice was sought, and it was with her approval that the members decided to join the federation. If the board decides that the action was unconstitutional the chapter will of course withdraw.
