IN REMOVAL.

Twenty-eight years ago this evening Abraham Lincoln, the first Republican President of the United States, was assassinated by John Wilkes Booth in Ford's theater, Washington, D. C. He died the following morning.

A great deal has been spoken, and said of the murdered President that is fulsome and maudlin, thus detracting to a great extent the dignity which should surround the subject. The plain facts in relation to him contain enough that is instructive, historic and pathetic. He was a typical western man, of gigantic stature but low-browed, angular and awkward in his movements. His countenance was singularly homely but always presented an appearance of goodness and goodness strongly allied to firmness of the most decided type. His education was neither good nor bad—no good as related to the classics and the higher branches of modern study, and not bad as regards complete familiarity with the English language, with its literature and with its more comprehensive department of mental acquisitions—in intelligent comprehension of subjects and things with which he came in contact. His advancement from the humblest of stations to the highest was not rapid; it was impossible that it should be, for he had no pride of ancestry, no individual relatives or friends, and scarcely ever more than a dollar or money at a time; and to these drawbacks the harder one that as soon as his ability began to receive the attention it merited he was brought into competition with some of the greatest men of his day, prominent among them being the venerable "little giant," Stephen A. Douglas, and we can then understand how difficult and trying was the path along which he plodded. But nothing could hold him back. Apparently at the zenith of his career, he was beaten for the United States Senate by Douglas, only to defeat and utterly destroy him politically a few years later—this, too, after winning the presidential palm from the empire state represented by the then foremost statesman in his party—William H. Seward.

The contrast between Lincoln and his assassin in point of personal appearance was so great as to be almost phenomenal. One homely, old-fashioned and lanky, the other the Apollo Belvidere in real life, handsome as a dream and graceful as a gazelle. Both were somewhat tainted with hereditary lunacy, greatly increased by brooding over what he considered the wrong done the South, whose people he loved to a degree amounting to frenzy. The final render of the war and the heart of the nation making merry at a playhouse decided him at once, and with the shout of "Seward's friends" (thus he it ever with tyrants), the South is avenged! The assassin flew from a role that would have been more terrible than that of his victim, to meet one a few days later fully as terrible.

Never were words more tragically applied than were those of Booth, the South had all the revenge which a people engaged in a cause that was wrong were entitled to, in accordance with any code known to man. Great heaps of the invaders' slain on a hundred blood-soaked battlefields, hospitals throughout the land filled with the maimed and slowly dying, a vast host of waiting and longed for, orphaned, a debt beyond the ability of a generation to pay—all this inflicted upon the North because seeking for the only effectual means at their command to end the nation together unpopulated by the curse of human slavery! And Lincoln was so far from being a tyrant as any man that ever lived. He was right in the prosecution of the war, but was ever ready to accept any proposition that would secure with honor and union, and his gentle heart was wrung more severely and more times than any of us will ever know at the earnings and destruction that was going on.

In accordance with strict definitions, Lincoln was not a martyr; but when we consider the awful trials, the bitter experience and the inevitable anguish of soul through which he passed for four long and cruel years, galling up his life because he would not falter in upholding the flag with all its stars and stripes, and the work he did, we can scarcely accord him any other position or give him any other names as fitting. He saved his work with his blood. After the battlefields had cleared away and the din of strife had ceased to reverberate throughout the land, those who had opposed him and the cause with force and arms, began to realize that what was proclaimed by the apostle, as an act for them and theirs, was only a universe measured by many years of sorrow and regret. More they had learned to love him for himself, the scales of prejudice and bigotry had fallen from their eyes and they recognized in the man that had fallen a friend, who would have done and done his duty, and his purpose is to be a benefactor. As brave men and valiant warriors, they appreciated and acknowledge the man's soul, courage and steadfastness of how he overcame them, and now, after so much time has passed, the wounds are quite healed, the scars are entirely gone, but it was not for the great eagle to see it with his human eyes, day his memory be ever green!

ILL-MANAGED CHURCH.

Mention was made in last night's News of an unsuccessful attempt by Mr. George Henry of this city to obtain admission to the Temple services yesterday by means of a recommendation issued last season to him. There can be no doubt that the party to this fraud was aware of the true character of the business, and it is as well to let Mr. Henry know, for his special edification, that respectable people of all classes of the community look upon the case as one beneath even contempt.

There is nothing in the Temple dedicatory services that does not bear the light of truth, and it is as well to let Mr. Henry know, for his special edification, that respectable people of all classes of the community look upon the case as one beneath even contempt. There is nothing in the Temple dedicatory services that does not bear the light of truth, and it is as well to let Mr. Henry know, for his special edification, that respectable people of all classes of the community look upon the case as one beneath even contempt. There is nothing in the Temple dedicatory services that does not bear the light of truth, and it is as well to let Mr. Henry know, for his special edification, that respectable people of all classes of the community look upon the case as one beneath even contempt.

The chief feature of the dedicatory services consists of the dedicatory prayer, which has already been published. There were some real in it, as well as some that every sentiment therein expressed can be endorsed by Christians generally throughout the world; and the antipathy and antipathy delivered are all in harmony with that prayer. There is nothing in it from the outside world, but for all that, the State has as much right to its private meetings as has any other denomination in this country.

TAKING IT ALL BACK.

Commissioner Blount is a good deal of a statesman. He doesn't confide his business to every Tom, Dick and Harry that comes along, but goes quietly to those concerned and states his case without waste of time or words. It did not take him long after reaching Utah to determine exactly what to do, and it was done without fuss or flurry. Having decided that there was not sufficient authority of justification for going the State and State as a sign of our protection, he had the flag lowered and the one which the majority of the people undoubtedly desired replaced. This, we take it, is the end of the annexation scheme for the present at least.

It must not be understood that timidity or irresolution on the part of our government's representative had anything to do with this; for from it, as an evidence of this, he notified the powers that be that no interference from other sources would be tolerated; besides, he does not come of a timid race. The flag was hauled down because, as previously suggested, it had no right to be there and thus brought our government into disrepute. A great nation cannot afford to either boldly or furtively fly upon an inferior flag, and it is as well to let the natives do not ask for it, was unnecessary to say the least.

We hardly think the islands will release into a monarchy, because it would be going backward for one thing, and in a nation containing no more people than there are in Salt Lake City would be an absurdity. However, it is their affair, and if they so wish it is as well to let them have their way.

FOR THE NEW SOUTH.

In all respects interesting, and in many respects valuable, is the movement of Southern governors which met at Richmond last night yesterday and is still in session. The number of the union adhering to the old executive officers of the various Southern states, of Mason and Dixon's line, and their purpose is to discuss measures for securing recognition of the great undeveloped resources of the North, and to induce the Northern capital and a healthy Northern and foreign immigration. Indisputably it is understood that assistance as to the safety of the property will be given, and that the half-breed, bloodstained status of Southern attitude in which some Northern journalists and writers still live to reveal, will be appropriately stigmatized and emphatically denied. The movement is in all respects commendable and it ought to be successful. The South is a vast empire, richly in resources of field, forest and mine, and abundantly furnished with all the requisites necessary for the sustenance in health, happiness and prosperity of teeming millions of mankind. The unfortunate condition which by this time has been explained the various effects for nearly a generation have been a blot upon the land. The war is over, peace with untroubled wings broods over the entire continent, and the sons of those who were fought on the opposing sides should have no other strife with each other now than the worthy emulation to utilize to the uttermost the resources of nature wherever they may be found. The prosperity of any one nation or nation is an asset to the prosperity of the world, and as such it is the duty of each nation to see that it is not lost. The prosperity of any one nation or nation is an asset to the prosperity of the world, and as such it is the duty of each nation to see that it is not lost.

SMALL EVIL, BUT A TERRIBLE.

It would perhaps not do to compel the man who eats the human skin to eat also the skin, but there is no harm in suggesting that those who take the skin, regularly bought and paid for, be brought to the temple to provide some other disposition of it than the public sidewalk where it endangers human legs and spines, and is a constant invitation to sinfulness. A city ordinance on the subject, with sufficient penalties for flouting the same, would be a small evil, but a very real one, and with fair intelligence it could be enforced with tolerable vigor. Whoever has contemplated a ripe banana skin in the morning state, and thereby set down with more violence than grace, will join in the feeling that the money that has done this thing should be employed to refrain in the future, if his appetite for the fruit does not cause him to eat it.
