KICKED BY FAMILY HORSE.

William Garrison of this place is in the hospital, more, he says, from chagrin over being kicked and having his leg broken by an old work horse, than from the broken limb itself. Garrison is an old time cow puncher and broncho buster, is six feet seven inches in height, and says that it is hard indeed to have his leg broken by the faithful family horse which his wife and children are accustomed to driving, after having spent so many years breaking the wildest bronchos and outlaws without a fracture.

BEGINNING OF FRUIT CULTURE.

One pear was grown here this season, the first fruit to grow, and a fruit festival was given the children from the money made on bids for the pear. It was on exhibit at the county fair in Beaver last week.
