A Western emigrant having stolen e norse from an Indian, the latter con victed him of the offense by a very in-centous plan. He complained to a judge, who had the emigrant, with the norse, brought before him. The prisoner swore that the animal be solder had not received due considera-ioz, and he devised an ingenious irrangement for wiping the inside of he seam without in any way interfer-ing with the other operations. It is intersting to note what this amounted onged to him, and that he had brough t from the East, so that the judje did lot find himself in a position to con-vict. He was even about to return the orse to him, when the Indian said: "If you will allow me, I will prove hat the animal belongs to me." Im O. Apes as Workers. The ideas of M. Victor Meunler with The ideas of M. Victor Meunler with regard to the domestication of apes are discussed in the new number of the Revue d'Anthropologie, by Madams ('lemence Boyer, the French translator of Darwin. Madame Boyer does not lonbt that, under a proper system of training apes might be made good workers. They lack perseverance, in-teed, but in general intelligence they are, she thinks, superior to the dog he horse, or even the elephant. Bad Syntax but a Good Heart.

The last time that Van Rensselear came home he came a sick and death-threatened man. It was then that Olivia's aunt, Mrs. Ottarson, revealed how much depth of humane goodness may co-syst with the most disorderiv

The solder used when the work was done by machinery was less than when loke by hand, and to nine hundred and ninety-nine men in a thousand the matter would be looked upon as worth to consideration. The thousandth was a workman in the employ of a firm using one of these matchines. He was evidently impressed with the idea that this little drop of the employ of a firm using one of tacse lost he father and two brothers machines. He was evidently impressed with the idea that this little drop of a considerable distance all around the colliery; throwing ner arms about and wildly screaming, she was the object of every one's pity. Her sister, too, whose expressions of grief were not so demonstrative, fainted. And with all these sights and horrible sounds, a fearful gloom was cast over the place. Meanwhile the bodies were ever being found, until the record footed up now sixty, now seventy-one, and soon the body of a man just recovered was sur-James Trais," remarked a woman. "His poor wile, who has nine children, has been married three times, and this is the second husband killed in the mine." A mother with her little girl was crying loudly at the side of the cart where the remains of her husband were placed. She was walling over her loss, and throwing herself on the coffin cried out:"My dear, good husband, the father of my children, ob, my dear husband." Her little daugh ter, too, was screaming out. These are merely quoted as instances of, many harrowing scenes which brought tears to the eyes of even the male portion of the bystanders. At the burial ground the spectacle was one of a most exceptional kind, reminding one of the devastating effect of some dteadrul pisgue or of a bloody battle. Grave-diggers were there dozens, and the cofflos were piled in heaps, while the clergymen were en-gaged in reading the burial service, solemalzing the last rites. Auother night's hard work in the tunnels brought out a great many corpses, and the people working in the deadhouse labored incessantly to keep race with the movements of the bearers. The western tunnel was found to be not so bad-iv shattered as the Hill end. On the cause of the explosion, the investigation by the coroner, which ex-tended over several weeks, threw little light. The miners made positive state-ments to the effect that there were reingst. The miners made positive state-ments to the effect that there were re-markable indications of the presence of-gas_in_the mine, and that only a smail proportion of safety lamps were in use, it being the custom to use these lamps in the gas district. The immed-late cause of the explosion was a faked light of some kind, and the men are very emphatic at the absurdity of send-ing saiety imps into a mine with a backed ismp alongside them. It thas been stated that the men working in the gassy bords were using safety lamps that were taken in unlocked. As to the quantity of gas, it is reported that one of the men lit it with a match on Tuesday night. The explosion oc-curred on Wednesday.
