

THE NEW WOMAN.

The dark-eyed Miss Brown, a tall, slender, well-proportioned young woman, with a face that was a study in contrasts, was waiting for her husband at the door of the little cottage in the suburbs of Salt Lake. She was waiting for him to come home from his day's work, and she was waiting for him to tell her of his adventures and his triumphs.

"I am so glad to see you," she said, as he came in. "I have been waiting for you all day. How was your work?"

"Very well," he answered. "I have been very busy, but I have managed to get it all done. I have also been thinking of you a great deal, and I have been wondering how you were getting on."

"I am very well," she said. "I have been very busy, too. I have been thinking of you a great deal, and I have been wondering how you were getting on."

"I am so glad to see you," she said, as he came in. "I have been waiting for you all day. How was your work?"

"Very well," he answered. "I have been very busy, but I have managed to get it all done. I have also been thinking of you a great deal, and I have been wondering how you were getting on."

They had been married for three years, and they were still as happy as on their wedding day. They had a little son, and they were expecting a daughter. They were both very busy, but they were both very happy.

"I am so glad to see you," she said, as he came in. "I have been waiting for you all day. How was your work?"

"Very well," he answered. "I have been very busy, but I have managed to get it all done. I have also been thinking of you a great deal, and I have been wondering how you were getting on."
