This 'manifests the importance of guarding these avenues for the insinuations of the vicious, by making them as select as practicable.

Appropriate to this subject, I frequently notice, in the papers, public mention made that a select party will be held in a certain Ward hall, or other local building. What appears singular to me in this connections that are the selections of the selection of th tion is that such notoriety should be given to a matter that is not, from its prima facie nature, for the gen-eral public, but the select few sufficiently fortunate to receive an invitation. It looks to me as if such beforehand announcements were in the nature of invitations of a general character. The question is, however, as to whether or not such previous publicity does not inform the e who might be of an evil-designing turn when they can get opportunities to insinuate themselves into association with innocent people.
