

lement is in Manchester, where her third husband, Wheeler, now lives. The Rogers marriage is claimed to be void, as Bly was still living; but as Bly died before the Wheeler marriage, the latter was legal. Manchester says the Bly she married is not the Bly who is said to be dead, but another man; that the married Bly was alive when the Wheeler marriage took place, which makes that void. It is also held that the Wheeler marriage is of no effect under Connecticut laws, from the fact that at the time Wheeler married her father was married to her sister, so that he was not only marrying his mother-in-law's sister, but also his father's step-sister, and so on. It is a very peculiar case.

Unearthly Visitors.

Cibber the actor and dramatist, in company with three friends, once made an excursion. Cibber had a false set of teeth; one of his friends, a glass eye; a second friend, a cork leg; but the third had nothing particular, except a remarkable way of shaking his head. They travelled in a post-coach; and while at the first stage, after each had made merry with his neighbor's infirmity, they agreed that at every bathing-place they would all affect the same singularity. When they came to breakfast, they all squinted; and as the countrymen stood gaping round when they alighted, "Od rot it," cried one, "now that man squints!" "Why," said a second, "here be another squinting fellow!" The third was thought to be a better squinter than the other two, and the fourth better than all the rest. In short, language cannot express how admirably they all squinted, for they went one degree beyond the superlative. At dinner they all appeared to have cork legs; and their stumping about made more diversion than at breakfast. At tea they were all deaf; but at supper, which was at the "Ship" at Dover, each man resumed his character, the better to play his part in a farce they had concerted amongst them. When they were ready to go to bed, Cibber called out to the waiter, "Here, fellow, take out my teeth." "Teeth, sir?" said the man. "Ay, teeth, sir. Unscrew that wire, and they'll come out together." After some hesitation, the man did as he was ordered. Then another called out, "Here, you, take out my eye!" "Lor, sir," said the waiter, "your eye!" "Yes, my eye. Come here, you stupid dog. Pull up that eyelid, and it will come out as easily as possible." This done, the third cried out, "Here, you rascal, take off my leg!" This the waiter did with less reluctance, having been before apprised that it was cork; and also conceiving that it would be his last job. He was, however, mistaken. The fourth watched his opportunity, and, while the frightened waiter was surveying with rueful countenance the eye, teeth and leg on the table, cried out in a frightful hollow voice, "Come here, sir—take off my head!" Turning round, and seeing the man's head shaking like that of a mandarin upon a chimney-piece, he darted out of the room, and, after tumbling headlong down stairs, ran about the house, swearing that the gentlemen above stairs were certainly all devils.

Mid-sea Watering Station.

It is stated that M. Toselli, to whose inventive fertility is due some of the most ingenious apparatus yet contrived for submarine engineering, proposes to utilize the fresh-water springs at the bed of the ocean for the construction of mid-sea watering stations. The arrangement is, in effect, a portable artesian well, and consists of a heavy bell, sunk inverted over the spring, and carrying one end of an elastic tube, the other end of which passes through a hollow buoy at the sea level, and delivers the fresh water at a height corresponding to that of the source of the spring. The inventor states that when he has been exploring the bed of the sea he has noticed water bubbling up through the sand, and on one occasion, in the harbor of Marseilles, he performed the interesting operation of measuring the temperature of a thermal spring, over which his "talpamarina" was suspended.

A "GOLDEN" OPINION.—Dryden was once spending the evening with a party of brilliant noblemen, when it was suggested that they should all write some piece of poetry or prose and place it under the candlestick, the office of judge of their merits being assigned to the poet. The man who finished first, but seemed perfectly satisfied with his performance, was Lord Dorset. When Dryden began to read he seemed much pleased and amused with several of the pieces submitted, but at length reached one which evidently gave him extraordinary satisfaction. Presently he said that, while he had before him an abundance of good things, the palm must be unhesitatingly assigned to Lord Dorset, whose composition both in style and subject, revealed not only the essence, but the quintessence of excellent language, brief as it was. It ran: "I promise to pay John Dryden, Esq., or order, on demand, the sum of five hundred pounds. Dorset." The company all concurred in the poet's decision.

How They Love Work.

I wanted a cistern and I wanted to provide for the tramps, who came into our village in large numbers. I selected a convenient place for the cistern, had enough of earth thrown out to make it inviting for a workman, and instructed every member of the household to give to every tramp a cordial invitation to breakfast, dinner, or supper, as the case might be, after an hour's good work at excavation. I think three tramps have applied for food at our door since the cistern was commenced, some two years or more ago. The cistern remains unfinished. Tramps still come to town, and such of my acquaintances as make it a principle to give unearned food have been visited by from three to 14 a day.—Christian Union.

Reading.

In these days, all men and women read something, but the trouble is that by reading in a single vein, which so strongly appeals to their individual tastes and personal idiosyncrasies that it is not study at all, they lose their power to study anything else. The rule for successful and profitable reading would, in the light of these facts, seem to be to read only what one does not like to read. That reading which costs no effort and necessarily dissipates the power of study, is that which we should indulge in only for recreation, while that which we know to be important in itself, and in its bearings upon broad knowledge and culture, should most engage our time and attention. The trouble is, not that we do not read enough, but that we read so much of that which simply pleases us as to destroy our power to read that which will edify and enlarge us. There are many aspects in which newspaper reading is preferable to much that is considered essential to high culture. It is undoubtedly dissipating to the power of study, but so is any other reading which is pursued as a passion. It has this advantage: that it never detaches the mind from a supreme interest in the affairs of to-day. There are studies which separate a man from his time, which shut off his sympathies from the men and the movements around him. There is a kind of dilettanteism which rejoices in mousing in dark corners for the curiosities of history or art, which is wise about great nothings—wise about bric-a-brac, wise about antique gems, wise about coins, wise about classical antiquities, wise about old books of whose contents it knows little, wise about dead and useless things, and foolish enough to plume itself upon its wisdom.—Dr. Holland: Scribner for January

In the prison at Charlestown, Mass., is a man named Dunannin, who has had an eventful career. He was there when the war broke out, serving a sentence of thirty years, but he was pardoned on condition that he would enlist in the army. His bravery quickly won the good will of his officers, who knew nothing of his antecedents, and after the battle of Fredericksburg he acted as a spy, gaining important information. He was afterwards captured and sent to Libby prison and paroled. He broke the parole, re-enlisted, deserted, and committed a burglary, and is back in his old quarters again, with twelve years more to serve.

Would Never Use Them.

If persons were aware of the injurious character of most baking powders, they would never use them. Ignorant persons know nothing about the chemical combinations necessary. The only good baking powder, prepared by a physician with special regard to its healthfulness, is Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder.

HALL'S VEGETABLE Sicilian Hair Renewer is a scientific combination of some of the most powerful restorative agents in the vegetable kingdom. It restores gray hair to its original color. It makes the scalp white and clean. It cures dandruff and humors, and falling out of the hair. It furnishes the nutritive principle by which the hair is nourished and supported. It makes the hair moist, soft and glossy, and is unsurpassed as a hair-dressing. It is the most economical preparation ever offered to the public, as its effects remain a long time, making only an occasional application necessary.—It is recommended and used by eminent medical men and officially endorsed by the State Assayer of Massachusetts.—The popularity of Hall's Hair Renewer has increased with the test of many years, both in this country and foreign lands, and it is now known and used in all the civilized countries of the world. For sale by all dealers.

GENEALOGICAL.

To Latter-day Saints who are interested in Genealogical Matters:

By and with the consent of the proper authorities, I have concluded to go to the Eastern States during the present winter, to obtain the genealogies of such Saints as come from there who might desire to employ me. During my recent mission to these parts I acquainted myself with facilities that will enable me to procure genealogies with a fair degree of completeness, and in procuring those of a number of families at the same time, the expense will be but a very small portion of what it would cost each family separately. This is a rare opportunity for the Saints from New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania or Delaware, or Saints whose ancestors were natives of these States, to procure genealogies at a small cost. A circular, stating terms, will be sent on application.
