SALT LAKE CITY, - APRIL 12 1907.

SMOOTH THEM DOWN.

The attention of the engineering and street departments of the city is respectfully, but none the less vigorously directed, to a vast deal of unfinished work in connection with the laying of last "summer sidewalks," as they are distinguished from those that were put down before and since.

A patient public has been vainly waiting, in many instances, almost a year now, for the removal of little hillocks, and for the filling up of holes and smoothing out of rough places at sidewalk terminals and junctures. There is scarcely a corner in the whole northeast bench section in which new walks have been laid, where the earth is not riven and jagged as a result of the work done. In some instances the "jump ups" and 'drop offs" are so high as to be positively dangerous, particularly to after dark locomotion. Besides many walks are lined with dirt and cobble stones that make pedestrianism easier out in the street where animals and vehicles alone should travel. So far as the public can see there is no disposition to do anything towards remedying the situation, which every councilman as well as the heads of the departments named, must know, is very had. To begin with, the walks were put down along lines so notoriously crooked and on grades so manifestly irregular, that the whole improvement was a disgrace to the city, and an unintentional monument to the engineering and construction inability of those who directed the work. To add to it the other conditions herein complained of, renders it unendurable. Not since Salt Lake was a city have street conditions been as incomparably wretched as during the past year. It is high time to smooth down the rough places and make walking safe without guide or escort, in the residence sections.

NOT THE FIRST.

Do the newspapers which are saying that Mr. Roosevelt is using his influence toward winning support for Secretary Taft in the national convention of 1908, imagine that he is the first president who did anything of this kind? pointedly asks the editor of Leslie's Weekly, and then quickly gives answer that if they do they are very far astray. The Deseret News cannot make reply for all the newspapers of contrary is too much a matter of history for that. Jefferson's preference for Mendison over Monroe; Monroe's for Crawford, his secretary of treasury, before a personal difference separated them; Jackson's for Van Buren, and Lincoln's for having Johnson vice president, a fact that made him president on Lincoln's tragic death, are all familiar to every careful student of American politics. Grant's grief over the failure to accomplish the feat of electing Conkling as his successor is an interesting chapter of convention history. Hayes was more than favorable to Sherman. He gave him substantial aid, and Cleveland has not yet forgotten or forgiven the men who helped nominate Bryan instead of Carlisle. In view of this showing it is clear that Roosevelt will not wander into untrodden ground should be conclude to lend a helping hand to his successer. He will only be doing that which his predecessors have done for, lo, these many years, and that, too, without their honesty or motives being challenged in the premises.

THE KAISER'S MOTIVE.

With regard to the frequent recurrence of the report that Emperor Wil-Ham has determined upon the sending of one of his sons to America, "to round out his education"-to become a student in fact, at "President Roosevelt's Almin Mater" (Harvard), both German and American newspapers agree that recent developments indicate this is to be

Royal red tape, however, has so entircled his Majesty's purpose, as to make it impossible to learn at this time whether or not it is absolutely true. But among those who think so, apparently, is no less a personage than Baron Eberhard Von Pawel. Many thoughtful Americans have long looked upon some of the actions of the so-called "war lord" of Europe with suspicion. They tave never regarded him as particularly friendly to the United States. On the contrary the winds of an aggressive diplamacy have borne to our shores the solief that he was envious of the place we are curving out for ourselves in the niche of nations. But Baron Von Pawel mays this is not true. The sending of one of his sons to Harvard, he declares, is highly complimentary, and comes from the ract that the emperor ntertains a sincere and lasting admiration for this country. He is very amblious to make the German Empire the foremost of nations, financially and commercially. He likes the do things spirit of Americans. He likes their system. And he likes President Roosevelt. very much. It is quite natural that he should desire his son to emulate the errenuous and successful American, to drink from the same fount of knowledge from which the President drank. in selecting his second youngest son, Prince Oscar, he is making a very for-naturally as much inclined to study as he is disinclined to army life. And where could be study under more favorable conditions and freedom than here in this democratic land? Resides, the value an intimate acquaintance with American conditions will be to him, to all Germany, and eventually to this country, is incalculable. And it must not be everlooked that a life unrestricted by court etiquettes and circumstances which surround the European prince of a reigning house, will give him a breader vision of life in all its phases. Should Prince Oscar really come to he United States It may be depended upon that the open hand of hospitality will be extended to him, and that he will, in all respects, be quite as well treated as are American students in Germany. It may be that he will have to be "one of the boys," occasionally, and that he will be given a lively round of American college high life, now and then, but beyond that, there need be no fear that the amenities of international consideration and regard, will be in any wise violated. It may be set down at ouce that Prince Oscar's station will not

ORIGIN OF GARGOYLES.

Sait Lakers innumerable, who pass the altogether splendid Catholic Cathedral, now nearing completion on South Temple street, and the pretty and picturesque new Presbyterian Church on the same beautiful thoroughfare, daily stop and admire their imposing fronts and fine architecture. But to many their otherwise, in all respects, pleasing appearance, is marred by the presence of hideous gargoyles cut into the solld stone.

It must not be imagined that they are in any wise new or unique, for they are not. They are found on the fines; church buildings in Christendom, in Europe and the United States alike. They comprise almost every kind of bird and beast, real and legendary, and include many uncanny and diabolical distortions of the human form. The boldness and abandon to which this sort of ecclesiastical embellishment has been carried, probably reached its height in the work of the sculptor of the last century, who, during the restoration of Chester Cathedral, at the time of the disestablishment of the Erish Church, cut a hideous caricature of Gladstone's head over or near the main entrance to the edifice. As to the actual origin of this kind of maladornment there is more or less doubt. But special writer of the London Globe has succeeded in obtaining some definite information. He says that one of the earliest of the elaborate attempts to transform roof spouts seems to have been at the Cathedral of Rouen, where the figure of the great dragon was adopted for one of them, though whether it was intended as an object of terror to the hobgoblin fraternity of the seventh century, or a symbol of the church's triumph over a public foe, can only be conjectured. This fearsome wild fowl terrorized both bariks of the Seine and terribly ravaged the City of Rouen until he was gallantly slain by St. Rominus, bishop of the cathedral there. Probably in sheer jubilation of spirits and in compliment to the valorous bishop the carcass of the mischievous beast was embodied in stone and set up aloft as a warning to all depredators and any evil spirits by which they might be actuated. The name given to this unlucky animal is said to have been gargouille, and hence the the country, but it thinks they hold no name given to his effigy, according to such views, at least in the main. The some authorities. Others, however, derive the appellation from "gargoille," the weazand of the throat, or from "gargale," a disease to which swine are liable, and which causes a gurgling sound in the throat. like that which water makes in passing through a pipe. We are all at liberty to choose a derivation, since nobody can speak with au-

> If gargouille was really the name conferred upon the more or less fabulous beast whose carcass was imitated by some fanciful sculptor in the mak ing of an ornamental spout, then the probability is, that we have here the origin not only of "gargoyle," but of the French word for the weazand, as well as the English words, "gurgle" and "gargle." Commenting upon the matter the Globe correspondent says:

One ugly creature having been adopt-One ugly creature having been adopted for a stone effigy on so famous a church as that at Rouen in the seventh century may easily be conceived to have set the fashion for other churches, and the superfluous hideousness of so many of these objections certainly supports the notion that in part their sculptors were actuated by the idea of freightening the uncanny folk from the sucred edifices of the worshipers.

"The dragon is the commencement of sucred edifices of the worshipers.

"The dragon is the commencement of all forms of the gargoyle, and toward the end of the thirteenth century, when the propriety of adopting this creature had become an old tradition of church architecture, the form of the monster was transformed into a thing monster was transformed into a thing of some approach to grace and elegance. In the meantime, however, almost every bird or quadruned of evil repute and of a figure that could by any malevolent ingenuity be distorted into something frightful had been called in for the spiritual defense of the church, and when animal shapes alone had been made to undergo every contortion that could be conceived they were combined with human figures and faces; a development which inevitably led to the later adoption of all sorts of imps and demons."

PLOATING EXHIBITIONS.

The prolific and fanciful mind of Jules Verne, the noted French author and journalist was wont to picture in some of his apparently more impossible postrayals, the time when rich men would have floating palaces tate. sounded by great gardens, and would remain year after year upon the water, spending the winter, first in this balmy port, and then in that, or lose to a particular island where they could bask in the gentlest sunshine and be fanned by the spice laden and perfumed winds of some land where only beauty and health, and love and long life reigned.

Altogether it was langurously glorious and passingly pleasing to the dreamer, who would suddenly awaken to think that he was only reading the views of Verne, and that there was nothing real about it after all. So far as we can see the Verne idea is not destined to find fulfillment in the near future. But already there are great floating betels and summer homes and whatnot, upon the mighty deep, tunate choice, because this prince is and it may be that what the imagina- when a universal commune will be in-tive Frenchman saw in some of his more fervid mental pictures is nearer realization than we wot of. It appears that his countrymen are taking a decided step in that direction. According to Consul-General Gabriel B. Rayadal, who writes from Beirut. they have at least given it a commercial application by the inauguration of a floating exhibition of French products in the Mediterranean. He says that the ports of this sea are shortly to be visited by an exhibition ship, which is to be fitted out with a view to gaining new outlets for French commerce. The vessel is to be arranged as a floating exhibition of products suitable for export, and French manufacturers and merchants will be enabled to exhibit their goods and samples on payment of moderate charges. A number of salesmen, partly drawn from pupils of the commercial schools, speaking at least two anguages, will be carried, these being under the superintendence of experienced commercial travelers. In order o stimulate their zeal, all these employes will be paid on commission, and the widest possible publicity is to be given to the expected arrival at the ports at which the vessel is intended to call. At each place the salesmen

A DECISION ON BETTING.

Fitchburg Sentinel.

By a decision of our state supreme Court yesterday, betting on horse races is declared Hiegal. The case grew out of the arrest of Albert Rosenthal at of the arrest of Albert Rosenthal at Readville, jast session. He was convicted last August by a jury sitting in Dedham, but appealed to the supreme court. Now the verdict has been approved. This is highly satisfactory and it ought to put a stop to a great deal of conduct which is decidedly against the welfare of the community. If only the law could reach other forms of gambling as easily as it can betting on horse races, then there would be less money wasted in one of the most foolish ways that fools devised for throwing their money

UTOPIA A LONG WAY OFF. Washington Post.

Recause all men are not created equal and endowed by their creator with equal capacity for accumulating propbecause some men are constitu ionally lazy and shiftless and others are constitutionally industrious, eco-nomical and ambitious; because many nomical and ambitious; because many men naturally prefer criminal methods of getting a living while other men abhor that course—for these reasons, poverty and riches, peaury and comfortable subsistence have shode side by side ever since the record of the human family began. Numberless have been the attempts of well meaning persons to abolish poverty and equalize social conditions, but all have failed signally in such efforts to amend the work of nature. Possibly the time may come when a unwersal commune will be instituted and all the inhabitants of the stituted and all the inhabitants of the carth, being free men and fellow citizens, will dwell together in fraternal unity and social equality. But there is at this writing no indication, hint or intimation that such a consummation is immediately impending.

THAT ESTIMATED CENSUS.

Providence Journal.

Providence Journal.

It might have been expected that an "estimated" census would make trouble. While notody is disposed to take it upon himself to dispute the figures for the country as a whole, from various sections come loud protests against the unfairness of the figures as locally determined. Scattle, the souring city of the setting sun, declares she has at least 100,000 more people than Director North allows her, and of course St. Louis is among the list of complainers. As it would require a real census to As it would require a real census to prove any thing, these aspiring towns must control their feelings until the date for the big count comes around,

The Benefits of Travel.

Travel broadens a man-sometimes, when the engineer goes by the red tar-get or the operator is taking forty winks, he finds himself broadened out

Travel shows a man the resources of his country—he may look from the car window and estimate the millions of feet of lumber required for pickle ads and corset billboards.

Travel teaches a man to respect his fellow citizens—in fact, at the end of his trip he will have learned to raise his hat to any man in uniform.

Travel develops the brain—even one week of solving time tables fits a man to tackle fifteen puzzles and how-old-is-Ann propositions with a confident smile.—Chicago Post.
