

Music and Musicians

COMMUNITIES like Salt Lake, which mourn the decadence of musical taste, and the difficulty of establishing symphony orchestras and choral societies, may find a grain of comfort in the thought that they are only following in the wake of the great cities. This extract from the New York Herald, tells that even in the modern Athens, Boston,沉ained for years as the musical hub of America, the divine art is running down at the heel. The Herald's telegram says:

"Boston will have no grand opera this winter. Mr. Lawrence McCarthy, manager of the Boston Theater, announced today, reiterating Mr. Conrad's statements last season that Boston's patronage of the fine arts is bungling. 'Bostonians always make a rush for the cheap seats first,' Mr. McCarthy said. 'The wealthy people often buy admission tickets and then help themselves to vacant seats, from which they are ejected by the ushers.' So it is no opera for Boston this year."

"I have been to Boston with an opera company," said Mr. Conrad last night, when told of the dispatch to the Herald from the alleged musical Hub of New England. "I am sorry for Boston. And I am not going again with the Metropolitan company without a guarantee in advance." Mr. Conrad is a lover of art. But he is also a business man."

John Curt, the Portland manager, who is in Salt Lake to witness the opening production of "Ann Lamon" and who will later star Calve through out this country, has sent glowing reports of Miss Emma Lucy Gates in Portland, that he called on her the other day, and offered her an engagement to go as soprano with the Calve company. His offer was a flattering one, but Miss Gates declined it, as her tickets were already bought for New York where she goes to pursue her studies under Mme. Ashforth. Mr. Curt endeavored to secure her for next year, but the young lady thought it the part of wisdom not to tie herself up with a contract at the present time.

Hugh Dougall has issued invitations to a song recital by Mrs. James Dietrich to be held Tuesday next at Clayton Hall at 8 p.m. The assisting artists will be Mr. Willard Weine, violinist, and Miss Irene Kelly, accompanist. Mrs. Dietrich's selections will include a wide range from the Romeo and Juliet down to a number of popular Scotch songs.

Prof. J. A. Anderson will present two of his advanced pupils at a piano recital, assisted by Mr. Fred C. Graham, tenor, in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium Wednesday evening next. Mr. Anderson cordially invites music students and music teachers to attend. The program will be as follows:

L'Allegro Vivace from Sonata Op. No. 3..... Beethoven
Value Caprice..... Newland
Miss Bauer..... Newland

That Salt Lake should be given one of the thirty great concerts that Madame Emma Eames has been booked for in the United States this year is certainly a high compliment to the musical status and taste of our community. The date of Madame Eames' appearance is Friday, October 20, and the place is the Tabernacle. Meanwhile Prof. Stephens is training the choir for one or more supporting numbers. With the noted prima donna are several world-renowned artists—Emile de Gogorza, baritone; Joseph Hollman, cellist and Amherst Webber, pianist. Madame Eames' initial concert will be given at Bangor, Maine, one week from last night, after which she will be whirled across the continent to appear here seven days later. Her itinerary has not been fully made out but it will reach from Albany to Houston and from coast to coast. New York will be the last place on the program. The tour is under the management of Henry Wolfsdorf who yesterday telegraphed Prof. McClellan that the program would be along within the next day or two and that it will be a great one. Arrangements have been perfected with the local railroads to give special rates and run special trains into Salt Lake for the occasion.

Mrs. Martha Royle King is back from New York, more enthusiastic than ever in the study of her art, and is proposing a series of studio recitals during the coming winter.

C. D. Schettler, the cellist and mandolin artist, left Thursday night over the San Pedro line for Los Angeles. He will remain in southern California, giving 15 concerts, two of which will be given in Los Angeles. Mr. Schettler has received several flattering offers to locate in southern California.

Local lovers of the refined and artistic in piano playing will be pleased to learn that Messrs. Pypey and Shepherd are arranging to bring Harold Bauer, the noted pianist, here next month, probably just before election day. Mr. Bauer was here two years ago when he appeared in the First Congregational church, and his playing is still to be with the deepest interest. Mr. Bauer is one of the world's greatest pianists, and his appearance in concert is a red letter event in any community.

Prof. Pedersen will make considerable of the clarinet section in the All Hallow's college band, and there are to be eight of these useful instruments employed. The professor is a very busy man. He will organize the college orchestra next week.

Cecil Gates, brother of Emma Lucy, has entered the regular course of the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston, and will give special attention to the piano. Quite a number of Utah people have been students in that noted institution.

The local piano market continues to more than hold its own, and although there are seven music houses in the city all appear to be doing well. Collections are reported good.

The next meeting of the Monday Musical club, on the 9th inst., will be held in the studio of Miss Celia Sharp in the Constitution building. A feature of the meeting will be the singing of the last portion of the cycle of "In a Persian Garden" by Mrs. Harry Wilson, Miss Edna Cohn, Fred Graham and Hugh Dougall. These meetings have been held semi-monthly, and are very entertaining.

Troupes visiting this city often have their own musical director as the pianist, which lays off the man regularly employed by the house unless he can play some other instrument.

There have been some changes in the Salt Lake theater orchestra. John Smith, flute, and W. H. Daniels, trombone, leave to go to the Orpheum orchestra. Carrington, pianist and cellist, has gone to the Grand. H. A. Montgomery is, therefore, playing trombone, and Willard Flashman flute. A. H. Kellogg, playing first clarinet for Walter Sims until the latter has returned from southern California, where he has had a summer engagement.

He has a band of 25 men at the fair. He plays them altogether at noon in the big building, and later divides them into two bands, one playing at never before, this fall, and the members are very sanguine of having the most successful season in the club's experience.

SHARPS and FLATS.

Goldmark's opera, "The Queen of Sheba," will open the Metropolitan opera season Nov. 20.

Dr. Richard Strauss' new opera, "Siegfried" (the book of which is taken from Oscar Wilde's play), is casting with opposition on behalf of the Austrian censorship, and its production at the Imperial opera house at Vienna has been postponed.

Mrs. Potter is preparing to appear in a new musical drama, "The Murder of Bazio," in which she is to play Mary Queen of Scots. She has just closed her recitation tour, and is living with her mother, Mrs. Equhart, at the Swan hotel, St. James' Bridge, London.

A remodeled machine piano player will be introduced into the local market for $5 less than the regular price.

A travesty on "The Merry Wives" written by Joseph Herbert will be added to "It happened in Nordanland" at Lew Fields' theater, on Thursday evening of this week. Mr. Fields will support by a company of European singers. A complete symphony orchestra will travel with the singers.

Mr. Conried has brought back from Europe an opera called "Die Heilige Blut," for which the music was selected from the writings of the older Strauss, and "Young Heidelberg," which is a pendant to the popular drama "Old Heidelberg." In it, the young prince is a reigning sovereign and his former sweetheart the owner of the inn. His son is at Heidelberg. The music to which this story is set was selected from the earlier composition of Millochek, who wrote, "The Beggar Student," "The Black Hand," and other popular Viennese operas.

Among the singers recently arrived in New York for the Savage English grand opera company are Mme. Moretta Serena, Jean de Rossie's prize pupil when she made her Paris debut but two years ago; Florence Seager,ough, a dramatic soprano especially engaged for the role of Brunhilde in the Valkyrie; Alice Elizabeth Brown, a Canadian singer destined to sing Matilda in "Die Bohème"; and Mme. Crawford, dramatic soprano, who will alternate in the role of Brunhilde. Other principals with the company include Gertrude Bramson, Rita Newman, William Wagener, Josephine Schuch, Winifred Goff, Arthur Deino and Thomas David Richards of last year's company, and Francis Macleod, Ottley Cranston and Robert Kent Parker of last year's "Parisifal" company.

A London critic, in speaking of a recent popular concert which was boycotted by the presence of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, says: "M. Wieniawski was overcome by his feelings. I do not know if he could have done more than must be mildly held extra dimensions. He played magnificently, and the applause was general; and instead of bowing and taking his departure, he came forward and commenced a general handshaking. I have, I think, before pointed out that Mozart never kissed the prima donna who had sung his operas, nor is it recorded that Mendelssohn ever hugged Sir Michael Costa when upon the stage of the Philharmonic society. I therefore can hardly reason why M. Wieniawski should have shaken hands first with M. Hervé, then with the doorkeeper, and finally with the fiddle."

The newspapers of Boston, where Dr. Wolf Hopfer has just given the first performance of "Happyland," declare that no lyric writer since the days of Gilbert has surpassed the verses of Frederick Ranken. An example much quoted is the following lit, in which is described method of arming soldiers with musical instruments instead of weapons:

"We have armed each strapping fellow
With a piccolo or cello;
I have regiments of altos and bassoons;
All our drums and railway bands
I equip with drums and oboes."

And they have to get up on the latest times.

Where the town to be attacked is I assemble them for practice,
And outside the gates I give a Sunday

"pop."

Though the villages may curse us
Play at the encroaching music."

"Don't you approve of them?"

"I don't understand them, and I'll never act a part I can't understand."

BRIDGES CHASM FROM PARISIFAL TO MUSICAL COMEDY.

Homer Lind has jumped from Parsifal to the Ginger Bread Man. This artist was the feature of the Savage Grand Opera company last season and will play the principal part in a fantastic musical comedy. Mr. Lind says that all good work is art and he cannot see why his former colleagues should care sheep's eyes at him because he has left his fold and gone into musical comedy.

ERS. DON'T WANT TO INFRINGE ON THEIR FIELD?

"Are your inclinations for future parts wandering at all in the direction of Georges Bernard Shaw's or Ibsen's plays?"

"I hope not. One is about as funny as the other to me. Now I shall never act in Shaw or in Ibsen plays."

"Don't you approve of them?"

"I don't understand them, and I'll never act a part I can't understand."

LEGENDS.

Translated from Helene.)

Out from each dim old legend
They have come with their old
The lot of song comes to me
From a far fairy land.

Where in the golden twilight
Fair flowers in languorous grace
Blossom with a perfume of perfume;

Like maidens face to face;
Where trees have found glad voices
That blend in choired song;
While waves with rhythmic cadence
Sing to the shore in a soft murmur;

And notes of Love's own music.
Men's tongues cannot repeat,
Weak measures soul-aligning,
And charms delicious sweet,
Crown me with a garland of roses;

And then I forget my pain!
Oh! could I take my heart thens
Nor bring it hence again
Or land of love and longing,
In whose bosom I have found rest
But now despise the vision
And lie are my tears."
