which arrived from London last Saturday. On the 22d of last month while the vessel was in latitude 42 degrees south and longitude 90 degrees east, a seaman fell overboard from the starboard gangway. The bark was sendding along with a rough sea and moderate wind, but on the alarm of "man overboard being given she was rounded to, and the starboard lifeboat was lowered, manned by the chief officer and four men. A search for the unfortunate man was made, but owing to the roughness of the sea he could not be discovered; but the boat steered to the spot where he was last seen. Here they found him floating, but exhausted, clinging for dear life to the legs and wings of a huge albatross. The bird had swooped down on the man while the latter was struggling with the waves and attempted to peck him with its powerful beak. Twice the bird attacked its prey unsuccessfully, being beaten off by the desperate sailor, battling with two enemies—the water and the albatross—both greedy and insatiable. For the third time the huge white form of the bird hovered over the seaman, preparatory to a final swoop. The bird, eager for its meal, fanned its victim with its wide-spread wings. Suddenly a thought occurred to him that the huge form so close to his face might become his involuntary rescuer. Quick as thought he reached up and seized the "Mother, may Bridget cut that cake now?" asked little Johnny last evening

The huge creature struggled with wings and paddles to free itself. In the contest the sailor was beaten black and blue, and cruelly lacerated, but he held his own, and slowly the bird quivered and died. The carcass floated lightly on the waves, its feathers forming a comfortable sup-Carcass floated lightly on the waves, its feathers forming a comfortable support for the exhausted man, who had so narrowly escaped a lingering death. But another danger awaited him. He was not much of a swimmer, and the excitement of the extraordinary conflict began to tell upon him. He was faint and grew giddy. But with one arm around the albatross's body, under the wing, and one hand clutching the bird's feet, the sailor awaited his chance of rescue. Presently he heard his comrades shout from the boat, and in a few minutes more was safe on

A BATTLE WITH A BEAR. Black bears seem to be uncommonly thick in the vicinity of Waupaca, Wis., this Fall. Hardly a day passes but what some one comes into the city and reports having seen one or two almost within the corporation limits. A day or two ago a young man was picking up potatoes on a harm about half a mile from here, and hearing a noise looked around and saw a large bear sitting on his haunches not ten feet distant. He started to get a pitchfork near by, but the bear anticipated his near by, but the bear anticipated his movements and started for the woods. Fred. Lea and one or two other local sportsmen took their guns and dogs and started in pursuit of Bruin. They tracked him about nine miles into a swamp, where Lea shot at him and wounded him badly. The bear then made for Lea, who in his haste to get out of reach, and being too near to fire, lost his gun. Then followed an exciteing chase of about 40 rods, Lea leading the procession, the bear coming next, followed by the hound and a five-months old puppy. Brain gained on the humsman, who concluded life was too short for foot races, and climbed a small tree, which was not large enough for the pursuer to climb. The bear small tree, which was not large enough for the pursuer to climb. The bear then begin to gnaw down the tree, and Mr. Lea lowering himself to the ground as soon as possible attacked the bear with a small huntingknife, and with the assistance of the dogs soon succeeded in laying his black foe out in death. Mr. Lea had his clothing nearly torn off, and had it been day time when he arrived home he would have had to array himself in a garment of leaves to have escaped an arrest for indecent exposure. He received several scratches, but is proud over his bear victory.
