

During election, he said, the war cry was "Salt Lake work for Salt Lake workmen," and eight hours for a day's work," and on these planks the Liberals were elected. The contractors on the joint city and county building, they said, had reduced the wages of the men employed by them and had tacked on an extra hour. They asked whether the Council proposed to submit to such proceedings. Referred.

STREET CAR SIGN BOARDS.

Bell was responsible for the following:

Resolved, That the street companies be requested to put guide boards on head end of all cars, thereby showing the route and direction of the different cars, at the same time avoiding danger to patrons by compelling them to walk to the center of the street to find out the direction of the car.

Adopted.

For a supply of water for any purpose not specifically designated, the price shall be fixed by the assessor and collector of water rates, corresponding with the standard heretofore established.

There was considerable unimportant discussion as the ordinance was read item by item, and all went smoothly enough until the question of lowering the rate on Turkish baths was reached.

Simondl, it seems, is the proprietor of the only establishment of the kind there is in the city, and objected to the rate of $100. The steam used in such baths, he said, was produced by the engine, and that was already taxed.

A good deal of councilmanic wit was indulged in, and Rich inquired how much water was used in these baths and how often the tubs or vats were emptied. He said he took a bath at this place a few days ago, and eight of them used the same water.

The recorder here interposed the statement that the tubs were only emptied once in three weeks.

"In that case," said Rich, "it seems that the consumption of water is not very great and I think the reduction ought to be made."

The climax was reached when Wantland said: "I am not surprised at hearing such a statement come from Mr. Rich, as he has belonged to the party of the great unwashed for so long—"

Rich—If the gentleman ever makes that assertion again I shall certainly call him to order. I want him to understand once and for all that my party and myself are just as clean as himself or party and that my hair is combed just as prettily as his.

This statement caused Wantland to roar with laughter and he attempted to reply but Rich called him to order but the gentleman from the First continued to make an effort to be heard, when Rich roared as he looked across the chamber at his antagonist:

—you, if you don't stop your personal remarks I will punch your head for you."

President Loofbourow—Come to order! Come to order I say! We cannot have any such disgraceful demonstrations here again. If they are repeated I tell you I will restore order if I have to do so by the aid of a policeman.

Rich—Well, I just want him to keep within proper boundaries.

Ewing—I think that Rich should be compelled to apologize for using profane language in this house.

President Loofbourow.—Wait a moment; nothing more will be said about the matter tonight.

Business was then proceeded with and the feeling that was exhibited during the remainder of the session was positively painful. After the schedule had been adopted and the remainder of the ordinance referred to the City Attorney, Rich arose and apologized for the harsh language that he had used and said that he would see to it that it did not occur again.

Bell then moved that it be the sense of the Council that all members who were inclined to be cutting and sarcastic in their remarks refrain from indulging in personalities hereafter and endeavor to preserve order and decorum. He knew that such a thing was necessary as there were several members in the Council who had fiery and impetuous tempers. He numbered himself among that class and therefore thought that he had a right to make the motion.
