THE FARMERS WERE APPROACHED in a very skillful manner. They were told that free trade meant the trans-ferring of all industry to England; and there the market for wheat and meat was to be sought. They were told that protection meant the breaking up of English manufacture, and the establishment at home of vast in dustrial centres with home markets. They were told that the Mills bill meant free trade; that German and Randall protection democrats were shelved while Watterson and his fol-lowing were free traders.
