

parties were guilty of dishonest, or other improper conduct towards a non-member, it would be in the province of the tribunal to take that into consideration in rendering the decision, the exclusive object of those courts being to deal out evenhanded justice.

We think that when several persons are united in partnership, they sink for the purpose their individual distinctions and act in business in a firm capacity. A suit against a debtor would not be conducted by any person in the partnership, but by the firm, which, if partly composed of non-members of the Church would not be very likely to try to get a case before the High Council—unless the non-member had learned the value of its decisions. A person getting into debt to a firm, partly or wholly composed of non-Mormons, and not meeting his obligations, would have to take the risk of being sued in a secular court. This Church does not screen debtors unjustly from their creditors, but in all its decisions endeavors to establish equity. We do not think there would be any difficulty in the way of our correspondent, if engaged in business in the manner described, as it is not the genius or policy of the Church to interfere with the civil or any other rights of any person, firm or corporation.

THE DISCUSSION CONCLUDED.

We are indebted to our Ogden correspondent for having so promptly furnished reports of the religious discussion in that town between the Rev. Mr. Hartley, of the Baptist persuasion, and Elder Ben E. Rich, of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The debate gave another instance of the brotherly fraternization of sectarian clergymen on all occasions when there is any opposition, no matter what its nature may be, to the "Mormon" Church. On that issue, and that alone, they lay aside all bickerings and differences, regarding the Saints as a common foe. They all at once become accommodating to each other and as in the case of Mr. Hartley, will rather yield a strong tenet than run the risk of causing any friction. In this spirit he, a representative of a body whose chief point of variance with other denominations is a strenuous tenacity for the necessity of the administration of the ordinance of baptism by immersion, denied its essentiality to salvation. He thus placed himself on the same platform in regard to the chief feature of his sect, with the other religious organizations, as they repudiate the absolute necessity of baptism.

In the course of the debate repudiation was apparently the chief object of Mr. Hartley. He disclaimed the need of any new revelation: of the same officers and organization as established by Christ: of the gifts of the Holy Ghost, especially that of healing; the laying on of the hands for imparting the Holy Ghost. Thus did the learned gentleman, in behalf of himself and the clergymen of the other sects who supported him in the debate, scarcely leave a plank of the Gospel of Christ upon which to retain a footing, manifesting the possession of a "form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."

Mr. Hartley's position left an easy victory for Brother Rich, who, from the standard adopted completely swept away the frail fabric erected by his opponent. Even the necessarily brief report of the proceedings shows such to have been the case.

Elder Rich's closing tactics clinched the nails he had so deftly driven. It was a testimony that will stand for or against those who witnessed it, and was a fitting conclusion to proceedings in which the doctrines of the Gospel as exhibited in the Scriptures were ably vindicated.

The Rev. Mr. Hartley has the reputation of being a gentleman of education and experience, but whatever advantages he may possess in these regards over Elder Rich were driven out of sight by the force of truth wielded by a comparatively inexperienced youth, who ably represented his side of the question. The late Joseph Barker, a noted infidel, once said, in the course of a debate in which he took part, in the town of Dundee, Scotland—"An intelligent 'Mormon' Elder with the Bible in his hand can whip all the clergymen in the world." The truth of this remark received another among many exemplifications in Ogden on Thursday and Friday evenings. This fact has been so often demonstrated abroad that, as a rule, clergymen shrink from polemic encounters with the "Mormon" Elders.

GATHERING OF THE SNOWS.

On the 3rd of April, 1884, Apostle Lorenzo Snow reached his seventieth year. Few have noted his upright form, his quick active step, his ready mind and his sharp intelligent eye—reading small manuscript without glasses—have been aware that he was near upon the scriptural age of three score years and ten. He had been impressed for some time with a desire to gather around him his family and connections on the occasion of this birthday, but recognizing the fact that it was close to the time of the General Conference, and commonly a season when travel is difficult because of the spring rains, he fixed upon the 7th, 8th and 9th days of May for the family re-union. Invitations were extended therefore to his wives and children, sisters and brothers, sons-in-law and daughters-in-law with their little ones, to meet on those days in the Court House, Brigham City, which was placed at his disposal for the purpose. The writer was present by special invitation and greatly enjoyed the festivities.

At 10 o'clock, old time, the family met, numbering a hundred and ten persons present, and were called to order by Apostle Lorenzo Snow, who explained the object of the gathering and announced the programme which had been arranged. He was assisted by his son President Oliver G. Snow in the management of the exercises. Speeches were made by the several wives of the honored Patriarch, expressive of their good wishes to him and their veneration for the principles of celestial marriage by which they were united to him and to each other; songs were sung and recitations given by daughters and sons; and at noon, in one of the lower rooms, tables were spread with a rich collation for the whole party. Here a speech was called for and responded to, impromptu, by C. W. Penrose, of Salt Lake, and pleasant sentiments were expressed by the company.

At 2 p. m. the exercises were resumed, the court room being filled with invited guests, and songs, recitations, written addresses, a very fine poem by Sister Eliza R. Snow Smith, extemporaneous speeches, etc., were delivered until five o'clock.

During the proceedings the following telegram was received from Brother Snow's brother, a non-Mormon:

SANTA BARBARA, Cal.,
4:30 p. m., May 7th, 1884.

Lorenzo Snow:

Hail brother, sister! Love, peace, happiness, God's blessings on all.

SAMUEL P. SNOW.

In the evening an entertainment was given by the little folks of the family, in the same place, which was filled with invited guests. Little children four years old and upwards recited, danced, sang, played on musical instruments and performed a pleasing play, introducing a fairy spectacle that gave an opportunity for the smaller children to display their talents. The costumes were elegant and appropriate, the performance was excellent and everything passed off without a jar. The confidence and aptitude exhibited by the very little ones in coming out upon the stage alone to recite, making their bow and retiring with grace, was really remarkable as well as pleasing in the extreme.

On Thursday the family met again at a general dinner, at half past 12 o'clock when toasts and sentiments were called for from nearly every member of the family but the grandchildren, and none failed to respond. Wit, humor, good wishes and benedictions filled up the time rapidly until 2 o'clock, when the entertainment was continued, the courtroom being crowded to its utmost capacity. Some most excellent impromptu speeches were delivered and recitations and poems declaimed. In the evening "Love's Sacrifice" was splendidly performed, all the actors being members of the family, sons or sons-in-law, daughters or daughters-in-law of the honored patriarch.

The general talent displayed was really exceptional. Every one called upon, down to the little girls scarcely able to speak plainly, responded without hesitation, and none were unable to perform their respective parts in a manner that would do credit to well-trained professionals. It is indeed rare to find so much talent in one family. Usually gifts of this kind are possessed but by one or two members, but the Snows seem all to be musical, poetical or dramatic, or all combined. Some most excellent addresses, written and impromptu, were made during the festivities and we only regret that we have no space to reproduce them.

On Friday another family dinner was given, at which the sallies of wit, in toast and conundrum, were brilliant and humorous, and all the remaining adult members of the family who had not previously contributed to the after-dinner exercises responded to calls from the President. A number of young men between the ages of eighteen and twenty-four were seated together at the head of one table as the bachelors' group, and were the objects of much pertinent advice. But they were fully able to return the retort courteous, and added much to the general enjoyment.

In the afternoon most of the family assembled on the east porch of Brother Snow's residence, facing the Co-operative Store, and were photographed in a group. In the evening a grand ball was given in the upper room of the Court House, when the public part of the proceedings was brought to a close in a most enjoyable manner. During the intervals between the exercises lasting three days, Brother Snow as the patriarch of his house bestowed blessings upon the heads of many members of his large family, intending to continue before they separated, for their respective homes, to lay his hands upon and bless them until all received his administrations, as it is unlikely that they will ever enjoy another re-union of this kind in this state of existence. But in the great eternity before us all, they expect a reunion of a far more extensive and pleasing character. When the head of this family, having gained his exaltation and holding the keys of eternal lives and endless increase will gather around him all that belongs to his house, saved, redeemed, resurrected, glorified to reign over them as a king and a priest unto God for ever, when there will be trial, no weakness, no pain, and no death, and where perfect union and unfading affection will bind all together in the perfection of bliss and the majesty of the glorified sons and daughters of the Eternal Father.

In conclusion, we repeat the sentiment we expressed on the occasion: Health, blessing and peace to the Snows of our mountain valleys, with their head, chief and patriarch! May they be as numerous as the flakes that fall in winter, as firm and solid as the snows of our loftiest peaks in the defence of right and the maintenance of true principles; as resistless as the mighty avalanche in sweeping away error and rooting up iniquity; and shining in the sunlight of celestial glory, remain forever the emblem of all that is pure, and beautiful, and good!

THE LIVER AND ITS FUNCTIONS.

It has become a well established fact that the larger portion of diseases to which the human family is subject arise in the first place from some derangement of the Liver. This organ is not only the largest, but at the same time one of the most important. The venous blood, on its return to the heart, passes through this organ, and in its passage the impurities, as also the secretions which are necessary for digestion as well as for a cathartic to assist in the renewal of waste material &c. are eliminated. From this it is seen that the Liver is liable to get out of order to a greater or less extent, and when this occurs it is impossible for it to properly fulfil its office of removing all objectionable matter from the blood, but allows it to pass through, carrying with it the poisons of which it should have been relieved.

With impure blood the whole system becomes affected, and no organ can properly perform its function unless it is supplied with PURE BLOOD to maintain its strength. So the Liver becomes all important, and when one of the most important organs of the body is continually tired, worn out, is congested, and withstands or to Piles, Headache, Sick Stomach, Bloating, Complexions of Eruptions of Skin, etc. they may be attributed to a derangement of the Liver. A remedy is required to restore it to its original strength and vigor. For all the complaints of this kind there is no medicine that equals
