

of religion, will do more to strengthen a man against a sea of troubles than the loving-kindness and solicitude of a wife, the truest, tenderest and best of earthly friends.

"What shall I do?" mentally ejaculated Jenks: "What shall I do?" He was about to repeat the question when the door bell rung, and in walked old uncle Tom Beltry.

"Well, Jenks, my boy," exclaimed the happy old gentleman; "how are you?" and he gave him a most energetic squeeze of the hand.

"Why, the fact is, uncle Tom, my wife is very sick."

"Nothing dangerous, I hope?"

"Oh, no! I think not."

"Then, what in the deuce makes you look so blue? Why, your face is as long and as sombre as a funeral? What ails you?"

"Nothing, uncle Tom, nothing," replied the poor fellow, in a trembling voice, and with difficulty repressing a tear.

"I don't believe you, my boy; there's something wrong; come now, what is it?"

"Nothing at all, uncle Tom, I assure you."

This was too much for uncle Tom, who had heard certain reports during the day and who did not want to see his nephew a ruined man before he proffered assistance.

"Come, now," said he, "tell me frankly are you in—in want of money?"

"Why, to tell the truth, uncle Tom, I do want money. I have gone beyond my means in my housekeeping arrangements, and, as a consequence, am a little embarrassed."

"How much will serve you?"

"With careful management I can get along with a thousand."

"Stop and see me on your way down town in the morning," said good, benevolent, generous uncle Tom, as he shook Jenks warmly by the hand, and said, "good day, my boy, good day!"

This timely assistance relieved our friend Jenks. But for it, he must have sunk. We need not repeat uncle Tom's advice to Jenks to live within his means, and never to wear out his coat before he paid for it.

ALLEGED RESULTS.—An exchange says, that about seventy years ago, Eli Whitney invented the cotton gin, and in that cotton gin existed the seeds of the greatest rebellion in human history. It developed the cotton interest, which made slavery profitable, and developed the slave power until it became dictator in American politics. In the same town in which the cotton gin was invented and perfected—New Haven, Connecticut—lives Eli Whitney, son of the inventor, and the maker of arms for putting down the rebellion which his father's invention so innocently inaugurated. Muskets for the government, to the number of fifty thousand, are contracted to be furnished by his establishment, and revolvers without number are turned out of the best pattern. And thus is the "law of compensation" vindicated.

NOTICE.

Oh, all ye good people, who value your health, And think of your comfort as well as your wealth. Remember that now, just now is the time To sweeten your houses with whitening or lime; The cobwebs are hanging to ceiling and wall, And rooms look quite dismal as winter or fall, Unless they are washed and made clean and light With COOPER'S best mixture, or some other white. The crevices, too, which open so wide, And make a fit place for vermin to bide, Can all be well stopp'd and made good and sound, So that such a nuisance can scarcely be found. Then, talk no more of your rooms looking bad When such a good chance is now to be had, Of having your house brought out to view; Pretty near as nice as when it was new; Then, give me a call, before it's too late, Near the Corner of West and South Temple Street.
