NO PRESIDENT TO BE ELECTED.

We are not likely to have any President of the United States this next term—that is, if we believe the statements of the various political papers. The Republican journals solemnly assert that Seymour and Blair cannot be elected; The Democratic organs are equally solemn in their assertions that Grant and Colfax will receive a disastrous defeat next November. And if we were to believe the statements of both parties we should consider all the candidates the meekest men and the most unsuited for the position that could be found in the country.

The partisanship of the political press at the present time is simply disgusting. The columns of the partisan papers teem with the most violent and outrageous personalities. According to them General Grant is a drunkard, a man of no brains, a man who places no value upon human life; Governor Seymour during the war was a rebel sympathizer, an enemy of his country, his father committed suicide, he is threatened with insanity, and will probably have to be confined before the election is over! If we may believe these papers, the election of either of these men will be fraught with the most dreadful consequences to the country, and should by every means be avoided. The stories which we read almost reconcile us to the deprivation of the right to exercise the elective franchise which we have to endure because we live in a Territory. Who would want to exercise the elective franchise, when the only candidates for office are men—unless some folks who write for the political papers tell an immense number of falsehoods—whom to vote for and place in office would be the destruction of the country? Being a Territory has its inconveniences; but, in this instance, it would seem to be a positive advantage.

We are thankful that we live in a country where party feeling does not run high, and where a candidate for office is not abused, slandered and accused of every conceivable wickedness. We select suitable men for the positions to be filled, and then unanimously vote for them, and as far as our Legislature has the power, fees, salaries, etc., are kept so low that it is no object for a man to be an office holder; it is not the man who seeks the office with us; but it is the office which seeks the man. We find this plan work admirably. Our public affairs are well administered, the finances of the Territory, and of the various counties and cities are in a healthy condition, and we are free from those abominable nuisances—hungry politicians—which are a worse pest than even the grasshoppers. It may be that some think that we lack civilization because we conduct our elections in this manner; but the fruits of our course satisfy us; we are pleased with them, and would not, on any account, change our plan. That system which operates so excellently here, might, if the people would have it so, answer equally well elsewhere, including national elections. Suitable men could be selected for President and Vice-President upon whom all could concentrate, and for whom all would vote. But before this could be done, the politicians would have to be banished or killed off, or they would spoil all, especially if they were editors as well.

STUDY LAW.

There is a great neglect on the part of some of our leading men—magistrates, sheriffs, constables, and others—in not acquainting themselves with the general principles of law, and especially with our Territorial statutes. This arises doubtless from the disposition, which is so very general among our people, to live above civil law and to have recourse to civil magistrates as little as possible. But while the world is organized as it is, and wickedness has place in it and bears any way, it is necessary that a knowledge of the laws of our own country and of other countries, and of the general principles of jurisprudence should be obtained. Mankind have not yet arrived at that state of perfection, holiness and self-control that we can dispense with this knowledge. We have found it convenient in the past, and we doubtless will find it very useful in the future, not only to counsel and judge correctly among ourselves; but to protect ourselves against those who might be disposed to oppress us.

We have to become familiar with every department of knowledge, law included. We have a destiny before us, and we may as well begin to prepare ourselves for it. We will need, ere long, the wisest statesmen, the best-read lawyers, the most artistic musicians, the most skillful agriculturists, manufacturers, mechanics, surgeons and physicians, and, in fact, the highest excellence in every department of human labor. Our destiny is to govern. And to govern properly we must have knowledge. The more knowledge we acquire, the more powerful we will become, and the importance cannot be too highly prized by young and old. Let the men, therefore, who have to deal with the law strive to become sound lawyers, not to make money out of litigation, but to prevent it.

THE RAILROAD IN THE CAÑONS.

COALVILLE, July 23, 1888.

ECHO CITY
Lies at the mouth of Echo Cañon, but not at the head of Weber. Perhaps there may be others as little informed on the topography of the places named as your correspondent was a week ago; and if so it will not be out of place to inform them that Weber Cañon does not terminate before Echo Cañon is reached, nor at that point; but that it continues up the course of the Weber, the city of Coalville and the settlements of Hoytsville and Wanahip lying between Echo City and Chalk Creek Cañon, some ten miles up from the railroad. Echo City is a "corner" where Echo Cañon debouches into Weber, which it does almost at right angles; running near its mouth not more than a couple of points from due west. As there was a time when "The Eternal City" did not boast even a single hut, ere Romulus had started forth as an "empire founder," and as but twenty-one years ago Salt Lake City was a creation of the future, so it is not becoming in an itinerant chronicler to sneer at the small beginnings of places that may become famous. Echo City is yet in its infancy—considerably, in fact it may be said, very much in its infancy. It has a store, built of rock, run by Bromley & Co., where the post office is, a telegraph office, one of Wells, Fargo & Co's stations, some buildings for the U. P. R. R., and three or four log buildings. Certes, cities have before had as small beginnings, yet if Echo reaches a size and population equal to that which some expect, it will be able to look back upon its days of feebleness, and invite attention to its growth and progress. And no doubt it will do so should such ever be its fortune. Before proceeding up Echo, a visit to

COALVILLE
may be indulged in, where, last night I enjoyed the hospitality of Bishop Cliff. This place, which is a little over four miles from Echo City, on the right bank of the Weber, bears all the evidences of solid prosperity, not the least of which, is a handsome, commodious and well built meeting house, standing about midway up the main street, on the side towards the river. Many of the buildings are the primal log structures, stunted in height, and far from imposing in appearance; but under the energetic and spirited administration of Bishop Cliff, new erections are displaying more ample proportions; and some are of an excellent quality of light colored sandstone, good for building purposes, that is obtained conveniently. In the fitting store, which is built of rock, I was particularly pleased to find a well selected library under the care of Bro. Boyden. Here the citizens of Coalville can obtain for perusal not trashy, sentimental novels, but the works of the best authors in the various departments of literature. Milton, Byron, Cowper, Dryden, Southey, Pope, Shakespeare, Longfellow, Tennyson, and others lay their rich poetic treasures before the mind; Scott, Cooper, Irving, Dickens, Bulwer, Thackeray, George Elliot, Jewell, O'Connell, and like eminent names open a field of instruction and delight; Gibbon, Hume, Macaulay, (Neil, Allison, Bancroft, Patton and Prescott, with their valued historic treasures, are there for study and perusal; Livingstone, Stevens and Catherine, North, Sparks, Chasles, and Gordon Cumming offer their pages to make an acquaintance with almost unknown and untrodden lands; Hugh Miller discourses of the grandeur of the earth's crust with practical knowledge and learned simplicity; Cuvier and other naturalists invite attention to the wonders of nature spread around us; while a host of authors whose names are world-known offer information and instruction in science, art, belles lettres, and ancient and modern literature. I have been thus particular in speaking of this collection, because of it being so well selected and containing so many valuable books, at a cost of under—if I remember correctly—seven hundred dollars. The Bishop or presiding Elder who will place within the reach of the members of his ward such a fund of information, who will thus foster a taste for reading and mental improvement, if he also urges the perusal of and an acquaintance with the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and other works containing the revelations of God, will not have to wait two decades to see such fruits resulting from his labors as will astonish himself, however sanguine may be his hopes at the beginning. Leaving Coalville with its valuable library, its coal mines—of which nothing has been said—its progressive spirit and improvement, we will go and commencing at the mouth work our way up Echo. This cañon affords an excellent natural road for the rails, with but little difficult work considering the nature of the lengthened pass through which they have to be laid; though the work may seem heavy enough in places to those who are doing it. The first camp reached is that of F. Little, Esq., the courteous host of Salt Lake House, whose contract extends one mile into Weber and continues two miles up from the mouth of Echo. He is at work here with about fifty men and twenty-five teams, and the way "he do make the dirt fly," as Salem Souder would express it, is "something of a caution." Charles Decker, Esq., was with him and superintending a portion of the work when I visited the camp; and plows, scrapers, mules and men were on a ceaseless move, no one waiting for some one else to get out of the way, but constant motion and a gradual and steady progress of the work were visible. Mr. Little has a heavy "fill" or embankment to make at the mouth of Echo, but as the grading stakes were not placed he could not tell how high it would be. He has a cut of eighty rods, averaging six feet in depth; and a couple of other embankments of about 1100 feet in length, which will average near ten feet in height. It was yesterday, the 22nd, that I visited his camp, and after he had taken me over his contract we passed off to the road side to get a refreshing draught of pure, cold water from a spring, when we found General Dodge just alighting from his horse for a similar purpose, accompanied by Colonel Williams, Government inspector of the line, and a number of other gentlemen. Their escort of sixty men, had passed shortly before. In the afternoon, had a pleasant conversation with Hen. B. Young, Junr., who has quarters close by Mr. Little's camp. Having got fairly back to the railroad, I will quit for the present.

OBITUARY.—Sister Russel, relict of Captain Russel, has just received the mournful tidings of the death of her son, the last of her nine children. He died at Chatham, Miramichi, New Brunswick. Sister Russel is now 76 years old, and is remarkably brisk and active for one so far advanced in years. She is now alone in the world, having survived her husband and all her children. We sympathize with her in her bereavement and affliction. We copy the following obituary of her son from the Miramichi Gleaner:

The remains of the late George H. Russel, Esq., were interred in St. John's Church burying ground, last Monday. Concerning one so well known, far and near, little must be said now, for no more words can pronounce his worth, and we share too much in the keen sense of sorrow for his death to record more than our appreciation of him as a man and member of our community. The years of his life are his eulogy, and his good deeds speak loudly of him when he lies cold in the clods. The sentiment he reckoned a just and true estimate of noble natures may be aptly quoted respecting himself:

"He was a man, and take him all in all, we never shall look upon his like again."

His uprightness in social, commercial, and religious relations of life endeared him to all classes of our citizens. He kept intact the grand old name of gentleman, was the true and tender husband and parent, the faithful friend, the helper of the poor and an intelligent, active member of society. His kindly cordial voice and good counsel will be sorely missed by many, and his memory will ever inspire others to be brave, honorable, and always helping. The Church, institutions for education, and the numerous societies are deprived of one who wrought and thought for them. The long funeral procession that filed slowly through our streets, bearing all that was left of him to the narrow house, and the evident tokens of sorrow showed how well he was appreciated by all ranks and conditions. And when we laid him low in the grave, while the verdant foliage of the summer season was breathing in the land, though the shadows of grief were dark in our hearts, we remembered that as his life ended out he rested with simple faith on Christ, and so, knowing his faith was praised God for the Resurrection and the Life.

THE NEW CITY PRISON.—Local took a look at the new prison behind the City Hall the other day. The walls are completed and the roof is being put on. It is a question of its substantiality. It will take something stronger than a temporary wall or a jack-knife to make a hole in those walls.

CAUTION.—Cholera infantum and other diseases of the bowels are generally very prevalent among children at this season of the year, and are without doubt often caused by eating unripe fruit. It would be well just now for parents to use their best efforts to prevent this; for the foliage of the trees having been devoured by the locusts and the fruit, still far from ripe, left exposed, it is much more likely to be eaten by the youngsters than it would be if it were hidden by the leaves. And as much of it has been damaged and infected by these pests, the eating of it would, very likely, be followed by an aggravated form of the diseases mentioned above. Under these circumstances extra care on the part of parents may shield their children from an attack of these formidable and often fatal diseases.

THE EXTORTION.—By the kindness of President Young we have been favored with the following telegram:

NEW YORK, July 28, 1888.
Pres. Brigham Young:

Died:

He was the pride of many hearts,
The joy of many hours;

Methinks I see him, far away,
Clad in immortal bloom,
Beyond the reach of sin and death,
Far, far beyond the tomb.
His little voice is calling now:
Mamma, look up and see,
Your little Willie safe in heaven,
Then mourn no more for me. [Cor.]
