WORLD POLICY OF EMPEROR WILLIAM

German Colonial Question is One Of Work and Bread for Millions.

COLONIES TO SUPPLY NEEDS.

Will Also be Powerful Strategic Weapons in Making Reciprocal Trade Arrangements.

Berlin, Jan. 11,-Colonial Director Dernburg explained the foundation of Emperor William's so-called "Weltpolitik" (world policy) this evening at the German chamber of commerce. Herr Dernburg said:

"The German colonial question is the question of the future of national labor, the question of the bread of millions of industrial workers an the question of employment of German capital in trade, production and navigation."

In presenting the facts leading up to these conclusions, Herr Dernburg said that the English-speaking nations of

In presenting the facts leading up to these conclusions, Herr Dernburg said that the English-speaking nations of the middle of the eighteenth century numbered 9,000,000 while the Germanney 6,000,000 spoke German. Germany 120,000,000 spoke German. Germany 70,000,000 spoke German. Germany had lost a position of relative importance in the world because she had no colonies and was dependent more than ever on other countries for raw materials and food supplies.

Herr Dernburg described the rapid development of the United States and its increasing economic importance and its increasing economic importance and commercial influence throughout the western hemisphere, to the detriment of European nations.

He discussed in detail the probabilities of supplying Germanny's needs, such as cotton, copper, rubber, petroleum, rice, coffee, oil, yielding fruits, hemp, wool, etc., from her colonies.

Herr Dernburg said that Germany imported $37,750,000 worth of copper yearly. Copper mines were now being opened at Otayl, German Southwest Africa, and other deposits were being investigated.

As to wool, Director Dernburg said Germany imported $42,500,000 worth, of which $1,575,000 worth came from the colonies. German East Africa alone was able to supply Germany's entire requirements.

On the subject of colonization Herr Dernburg said that while the greater part of African colonies were not adapted to colonization by Europeans, German Southwest Africa and the highlands of East Africa contained areas twice as large as Germany which could be settled by Europeans, and large areas were also available in the South Sea colonies. The rest of Germany's coloniel possessions must remain so-called "plantation colonies."

"With the necessary patience and persistence," said Herr Dernburg, "a great part of Germany,'s reaufrements in raw materials can be obtained from her colonies. Germany recessarity, is becoming an industrial state owing to the lack of agricultural lands. Hence it is necessarity to export part of the goods manufactured. Our colon

MOVES INVESTIGATION OF SIMON GUGGENHEIM.

Denver, Jan. 11.—Senator J. H. Crowley, introduced in the upper house of the legislature today a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate Simon Guggenheim's alleged purchase of the United States senatorship, for which he recently received the endorsement of the Republican caucus. The senator cited published reports concerning the use of money to secure the election of members pledged to vote for Guggenheim, and declared that for the good name of the state, action should be taken.

"This is not a Democratic party measure," declared Senator Crowley, "and I wish to declare that I have no personal prejudice against Mr. Guggenheim, either politically, religiously or otherwise, but I do not want to be characterized as having been a member of a legislature that was bought,"

THE PLAY IN NEW YORK.

BY CHANNING POLLOCK.

Special Correspondence.

New York, Jan. 8 .- Something more than a week ago I was one of a dinner party at the home of a well known dramatist. The question of ideals came up, and for an hour or so there was hot debate as to whether a playwright was or was not repaid for giving to the public of his very best. A majority of us insisted that, in the end, good work us insisted that, in the end, good work was sure to be appreciated, and that the man who almed at the stars, though he might fall short, was sure to be a longer time falling than the man who merely almed at what he thought to be the level of general understanding.

This is a pretty theory, and one that ought to be true, but every now and again something happens in theatricals to shake it severely. The utter failure of Lena Ashwell in "The Shulamite," the fact that Forbes Robertson and Gertrude Elliott are doing no business with "Caesar and Cleopatra," the enormous success of "The Lion and 'he Mouse"—these are body blows at ideals. None of them shook my own faith in alming at the stars quite as much as has the comparative failure of "The Road to Yesterday," a fantastic comedy written by Evelyn Greenleaf Sutherland and Beulah Dix, and produced by the Shuberts on New Years eve at the Herand Beulah Dix, and produced by the Shuberts on New Years eve at the Herald Square.

"The Road to Yesterday" would seem to have every essential of success but oen—It is too utterly obvious. The principal Intention of the authors was to satirize the view of medieval life propunded a few years are in "the six pounded a few years ago in "the six best selling novels"—or the five of them actually sold in most of the bookshops actually sold in most of the bookshops that send reports. Incidentally, however, the Misses Sutherland and Dix have caught much of the poetry of that dreamland masterplece of Kipling's, "The Brushwood Boy," in which, you will remember—but if you don't remember you don't deserve to be told. "The Road to Yesterday" begins in 1902 at a studio in London, where Elspeth Tyrell, a little American girl with a head full of romantic books and plays, falls asleep from exhaustion after a day of sightseeing in the Tower and the British museum. Prior to her return, the audience has mat a number of interestish museum. Prior to her return, the audience has met a number of interesting people, including Kenelm Paulton, who is in love with Eleanor Leveson, a sweet young girl, absolutely unable to make herself love, or even trust, "poor Ken." There has been much talk—too much talk, in fact—of previous existence relevantees transporter.

existence, reincarnation, transmigration of souls and other Blavatskisms. With all this laying a foundation, the act is thoroughly enjoyable.

That following is one of delicious drollery and satire. Elspeth, put back 300 years, is seen living the life of which she has read in novels. How different it is, though, from the word pictures of Anthony Hope and A. Conan Doyle and Stanley Weyman! Elspeth's fat, good-natured Aunt Harriet Phelps is now Goody Phelps, a shrewdish innfat, good-natured Aunt Harriet Phelps is now Goody Phelps, a shrewdish inn-keeper, who beats and abuses her. Elspeth, desiring to get away, dons boy's clothing, as "they do in stories," and deceives nobody. The men about her carry "splendid-looking knives," but use them to eat with and, when four hired ruffians attempt to carry her off, the possible "heroes" of the tale seek refuge in flight. Not since Peter Pan came out of the play to inquire if we believe in fairles has anything struck me as being more beautifully quaint than Elspeth's breaking away from her captors and rushing down to the footlights, where, with uplifted arms footlights, where, with uplifted arms and disillusioned mind, she cries, "Where is the hero?" Oh, where is the hero?"

and disliusioned mind, she cries, "Where is the hero?" The third act, still in the period of 1603, abandons comedy and becomes tense melodrama. Here we learn why Eleanor could not find it in her heart to trust Kenelm, now the wicked Lord Strangevon, who, having been married, to her, casts her off in order to gain the person and the fortune of Elspeth, now Lady Elizabeth. A year ago J. M. Barrie wrote a play, "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire," in which he ridiculed the stock theatrical situation of the woman in the man's rooms at midnight, and yet got his strongest scene by copying that situation; here the Misses Sutherland and Dix, having spent two hours in poking fun at romantic drama, achieve in a romantic drama moment the most stirring episode of the evening. Reformado Jack, come to rescue Elspeth, has been captured and threatened with death. To save him, Elspeth agrees to wed Lord Strangevon, who then commutes the sentence, but, while the bride-to-be is out of the room, has the hero given a hundred lashes with a bull whip. The device of bringing the dying lover back to be a witness to the marriage of his sweetheart is as admirably effective as the device of the torture chamber in "The Darling of the Gods."

The play ends, as does "A Message From Mars" and as do all other dream plays, with the awakening of the sleeper. In this case the termination is entertaining by reason of the fact that Elspeth, coming to her senses, is unable to disassociate her friends from their previous existences. Minnie Dupree, as the young woman of the adventures, does what is far and away the best work of her career, while Helen Ware, in the role of a gypsy, adds a verdant leaf to the crown of laurel fashioned for her out of impersonations in "The Kreutzer Sonata," "The Greater Love" and "In the Bishop's Carriage." The company is excellent throughout and the entire performance of a sort not to know which argues yourself unknowing.

If you bought a ready-made suit of clothes for $20 you wouldn't expect the quality demanded of a Fifth avenue tailor, and, by the same token, one has then," produced last week at the Liucoin Square, is not altogether bad. However, there can be no mistaking the fact that it belongs to the grade of goods which clothiers call "seconds."

The story concerns a young woman named Matilda, who finds herself in the position of losing a large bequest if she declines to marry Lord Jermyngham. Jerry, on the other hand, forfeits his interest in this conventional stage will if he refuses to marry Matilda. In order to bring about this refusal Mattle disguises herself as a cabin boy, and a preposterous cabin boy, named "Tod" Archer, disguises himself as Matilda, in which character he so disgusts Archer, disguises himself as Matllda, in which character he so disguists everybody as to effect the desired result. This is a subject that was milked dry years ago by "Charley's Aunt"—so dry that even men as clever as Robert Buchanan and Charles Marlowe were unable to find another drop in it when they tried to fill the metaphoric bucket known as "The Strange Adventures of Miss Brown." Everybody who ever used the theme was obliged to fall back on the same old situations—ers in the cast by coarseness, etc., etc., Alfred Hickman, who has been in musical comedy a good deal of late, gives a sprightly impersonation of "Tod," and Lionel Walsh as Lord Jerry does a bit of convincing acting in the scene in which he finally consigns the will and Matilda to Jericho. Except for these two and a dainty little "Caught in the Rain," a farce by Grant Stewart and William Collier, presented with Mr. Collier as its star at the Garrick, is just the kind of play that "The Dolly Dialogues" is of book. It is very delicate, very fragile, very neat and witty and well done. The story amounts to nothing; the whole merit of the piece is its verbal dexterity. Several of the wittleisms in the comedy are not new, but more of them are, and the only consistently bad feature of the dialogue is its obviousness. Thus, when underbred James Maxwell remarks, "I've traveled in good society," you know that he used the word "traveled" instead of a more common phrase in order that there might be a play on it in the rejoinder. You are not disappointed. "Yes," replies Dick Crawford, "you've traveled in it, but did you ever try to stop in it?" Sometimes the machinery is even more conspicuous. When "a grass widow with havfever" inquires nasally, "Can I speak plainly to you?" the audience laughs without waiting for Crawford to answer: "I hardly think so." All this notwithstanding, "Caught in the Rain" is a wonderfully clever bit of work, and an excellent evening's entertainment.

The title is derived from the fact that Crawford (Mr. Collier), a professed woman-hater, is caught in the rain with Murici Mason (Nanette Comstock). The two stand under an awning and strike up an acquaintance without either learning the name of the other, Crawford is hard hit, and when his partner, Maxwell (George Nash) proposes that they release certain mining property by Crawford's marrying the owner, Muriel Mason, who cannot relinquish the deeds until she is of age or has a husband, he declines, because he loves "someone else." Eventually it is discovered that the "someone else" is Miss Mason, and they live happily forever after.

Mr. Collier is as droll and dry and crisp a comedian as always, and his repartee with other members of the company touches the sense of hearing as champagne touches the sense of hearing as champagne touches the sense of taste.

The one other new play of last week was Winchell Smith's and Byron Ongley's dramatization of George Barr Mc-Cutcheon's story, "Brewster's Millions," offered at the New Amsterdam. Edward Abeles, a capital actor, is the star ward Abeles, a capital actor, is the star of the production, which is the first really theatrical venture of Thompson & Dundy, managers of Luna park, at Coney Island, and original managers of the Hippodrome. These young men are so used to handling big spectacles that they could not stage even so simple a farce as "Brewster's Millions" without an "effect," and thus, in the third act of the play, we have a truly remarkable representation of the deck of a yacht in a storm. Barring the fact remarkable representation of the deck of a yacht in a storm. Barring the fact that this boat faces a hurricane with all salls set—a folly that reflects more upon the captain of the vessel than upon the producers of the comedy—this "effect" is absolutely marvelous. It made me seasick. It is out of place however, in a piece of the type of "Brewster's Millions." and has excited much unfavorable comment for that reason.

Everybody who reads popular novels knows the McCutcheon story—how "Monty" Brewster receives a bequest of $7,000,000 on condition that he spends the $1,000,000 already in his possession within a year. This condition is made because the original owner of the $7,000,000 does not want his nephew to have a penny of the fortune that was withheld from Brewster's mother while she was in actual need. Monty must not throw the million away, and he must confide in no one the reason for his reckless expenditures, so that his behavior tangles him in many comic difficulties, and in one of a sentimental nature. The idea is excellent, and the difficulties, and in one of a sentime nature. The idea is excellent, and play, considered purely as a could not be better. There is a every two minutes throughout the performance. The one fault of the pictis that it escapes being convincing because of an utter lack of human cause of an otter lack of human touches to make the impossible story
