A profile view of Harry K. Thaw, now being tried in New York for the killing of Stanford White, shows several facial characteristics, notably the characterless nose and the peculiar shape of the head. He has been, ever since the trial began, by far the most interested person in the room and his attention to every detail of the case is never for an instant distracted. He makes frequest suggestions to his counsel and it was during one of these solto voce remarks that the accompanying photograph of the prisoner was taken.

EVELYN THAW MAKES SERIOUS CHARGES.

During her painful ordeal on the witness stand, Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, in her sworn statement that she was ruined by Stanford White in the latter's studio after being drugged, the witness inadvertently mentioned the name of a well known actress as the woman who first introduced her to that studio. She had been cautioned against mentioning names, for the reason that her testimony was supposed to be a repetition of her confession to Harry Thaw and which later culminated in his temporary insanity and the killing of Stanford White. But the name slipped out and it was that of Edna Goodrich. Immediately following the shooting of White by Thaw, the names of many actresses were mentioned as having been intimate acquaintances of both Evelvn Nesbit Thaw and Stanford White, among them having been that of Miss Goodrich. No surprise was, therefore, felt when Mrs. Thaw named Miss Goodrich as the woman who took her for the first time to White's studio, although Miss Goodrich is reported to have since denied it. Although the name did not come officially belore the jury, that body plainly hear d it and the fact of it being stricken from the record will not strike it from the tablets of their memories when they come to finally weigh the truth of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw's pitiful confession of her life's darkest secret.

by holding to the right because it is right, and not by holding to the right because there is an enticing wrong. Suggestive scenes in a play coming wholly as a surprise to the youthful mind, cannot, upon the dropping of the curtain, leave no taint and unwhole-some thought. In the great law suit brought about over the play, "Sapho," "one of the main points against it was that it was not wholesome. A woman goes quietly and deliberately to work to rain a splendid young student. He struggles heroically to save his own young manhood. But she winds her poisonous colls closer and closer about him until it would seem they cannot he broken. Finally, however, with one mighty effort he snaps them, and is saved, at least, so it is thought, but-he comes back. Do you sup-pose their young minds grasped the losson? It is much to be doubted, Do you suppose they took in more of the hidden good than the flounting evil. It may be possible, but hardly probable. Think of young ghis and boys sitting there and absorbing the posionous at-mosphere hovering about such a play, Small wonder many teachers present flushed to the roots of their hair-not the play-not the spiendid actress-art-ist-but to be seen there by their very puplis witnessing that which they would in their teaching keep from such ist-but to be seen there by their very pupils witnessing that which they would in their teaching keep from such young eyes and ears; until they were old enough to understand, at loast. Since these remarkable innovations in artistic corsetry have received Fashion's authoritative stamp of approval in Paris, Vienna, London and New York, there is perhaps little to add on their behalf while introducing them to the wellgowned women in our territory.

One stops in wonder and amazement at the simple announcement-"They Lace in Front"-and instantly before the mental vision sweeps pictures of what might have been had this revolutionary idea been given sooner to waiting Woman.

All the hampering drawbacks, all the inconsistences of dress, all the imperfections of the old-style corset, all the obstacles to a perfect toilette-all have vanished before the triumphant sweep of "L'Irresistible" and "The Gossard". A corset that you will fit. Not one that fits you. A distinction and a difference. Assuring every woman a better figure. An alliance of art and beauty, which gives that elegance of carriage not attainable in ordinary corsets.

An opportunity to investigate the advantages of these beautiful and really remarkable corsets is afforded every woman who will visit our corset section this week. Heretofore the price has been the only bar to great popularity. Not every one cared to pay $25.00 to $40.00 for a corset. Now it is different. You can buy a Gossard front laced corset for as little as $5.00. The manufacturers have delegated Mme. Farrisee, an expert corsetierre, to acquaint the ladies of Salt Lake City with this extraordinary corset that is fast making its way into the favor of America's best gowned women.
