East Indian Missionaries.—Elder William Willes, writing from the American Exchange Hotel, San Francisco, June 12th, announces the safe arrival there at 8 a.m. that day, of the missionaries for the East Indies who left here on Tuesday last. They intended to sail Saturday noon, the 14th inst., for Calcutta, via Yokohama and Hong Hong, per S. S. New York City. Brother Willes says: "Through the kindness of our mutual friend, Gilbert Clements, our lines are cast in pleasant places."

Previous to leaving this city, Brothers Willes, Booth, McCune and Pratt, had a group photograph taken at C. W. Carter's gallery. Mr. Carter, by request of the brethren, called in today to leave us a couple of the cards, which are duly appreciated. The likenesses are good and the souvenir is an interesting one.

Gerald Massey's Lecture.—At the Institute last night, a large audience assembled to hear Mr. Gerald Massey discuss the question propounded to Robinson Crusoe by Man Friday. "Why does not God kill the Devil?"

The lecturer proceeded to explain that the words "God" and "Devil" were synonyms for "light" and "darkness," and always had been so until religions had personified them, and made them the incarnate chiefs of good and evil. He gave many illustrations from the ancient myths of Egypt to support his assertion that the idea of God and the Devil, as now entertained by the Christian Churches was of comparatively modern origin. He argued that primitive man regarded darkness as the primal and superior power, largely because it obtained the victory over light, on the going down of the sun each night. He showed how they symbolically represented night by the crocodile, the dragon and the serpent, and how night, darkness, evil and the dreaded monsters mentioned were interchangeable terms. He contended that the strongest influence known to early man was fear, and showed the natural process of arriving at their conclusions that it was important to propitiate the great power of destruction and misery, and how it occurs that among many of the modern Christian sects, the devil has still more influence than the God they worship.

His discourse throughout, was full of comprehensive thought, and while filled with features, which are of course objectionable to those who accept the Scriptures as a guide, there was nothing at which any studious person could take offense, no matter how widely he might differ from the learned lecturer.

He concluded by saying that the good and the evil, God and the devil, have existed always, and ever will exist until we root out of our natures all that is vile, all that is degrading, mean and contemptible; and declared it was not the duty of the great Giver of life to destroy the evil, but that it was the duty of man, individually and collectively, to kill the devil, wherever and whenever, and under whatsoever disguise he may be found.

Mr. Massey was received and continually greeted with applause, as one great thought after another was unfolded, and at the conclusion the evidences of approval were almost excessive considering it was a Sabbath evening.

The gentleman lectures again at the same place on Tuesday evening, prior to his departure for Australia, and around the world.

SUNDAY SERVICES.

THE SPEAKERS AT THE TABERNACLE.

Elder Joseph H. Felt was the first speaker. He dwelt upon the experience of the Elders of this Church, who went forth, as the Apostles of old, preaching the Gospel to high and low among all nations, and of the universal testimony they bore on returning, that God had sustained them and brought them off triumphant over every obstacle. He took up the question of authority, and showed that the Bible, of itself, could not give anyone the right to preach or administer in the things of God, though many in the Christian world took license, on account of the command given by the Savior to his Apostles anciently, and usurped that authority.

He discoursed upon the Gospel's gifts and blessings, the "signs" following the Latter-day Saints as believers, and contrasted their faith and position with the false doctrines of the Christian world. He showed the necessity of Prophets and Apostles, and that the Bible was full of prophecies relating to the latter days, when God's kingdom was to be established upon the earth. He was proud of his standing as a Latter-day Saint, and wished to remain faithful and firm unto the end.

President Joseph F. Smith was the next speaker. He had of late visited considerably among the different stakes of Zion, and was happy to report a general improvement among the Latter-day Saints, throughout the length and breadth of the land. They were increasing in faith, intelligence, love for one another and the Gospel they had espoused.

The Propet Joseph was once asked how he managed to govern this people, and replied that he taught them correct principles and they governed themselves. This was a true and just rule, and was the key to the government of the Latter-day Saints to-day. No people were so free as this people, and were it not for this, they would fall an easy prey and be tossed about by every wind of doctrine. But being taught the truth and having it grounded in their own hearts, it made them staunch and independent, knowing what they were doing and being entirely free to act upon their own accountability. The fact that the sectarian world could not convert the Latter-day Saints was a positive proof that they knew what they were about and were not dependent upon man nor held in subjection by any human power. They were open to receive light and knowledge from any source, but could not be converted to that which was inferior to what they already possessed.

The speaker described the divided, discordant condition of the "Christian" world at the time the Lord revealed the Gospel through Joseph Smith the Prophet, and showed that though they were united enough now when it came to opposing "Mormonism," yet they differed among themselves in almost everything else. He illustrated the fallacy of the "only believe" dogma, proved that works were necessary or belief would be worthless, and exploded various false doctrines.

He showed that there were degrees of exaltation in the heavens, and that a person ought not to be satisfied with simply being saved, but should aspire to the highest degree of glory. The Book of Mormon was shown to correspond with the Bible and clear up all its doctrinal obscurities, and the Gospel which they both taught was necessary to the salvation of man. The world, if it desired the annihilation of "Mormonism," should let it severely alone, for all persecution only tended to strengthen it and confirm its believers in their faith, but this the world would not do, and the Lord's work would be hastened to its fulfillment as the result. It was a warfare between truth and error; error would yet be broken in pieces but truth would stand firm, God being its founder.

A New Thing in Wagons.—There drove up to the NEWS office to-day a light wagon owned by the Co-op Furniture Company, and made by the People's Implement Company, whose starting up we noticed several days ago. One of the points of merit claimed for the vehicle, besides general excellence of construction, and one which we saw practically tested, is that by an ingenious contrivance in the front spring and reach, the box and driver's seat, when passing over rocks or any obstacle in the road, are held perfectly level, independent of the wheels, and therefore all danger of the driver's being unseated is obviated as well as the load being rendered secure.

This vehicle is especially good for moving furniture, household goods, or anything requiring care in transportation. The patent on it is owned by a Chicago establishment, but the People's Implement Company have the right of its application in their manufactures. The wagon shown us was the third they have made of the kind, and the first one yet upon the street.

THE TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

The Teachers' Institute commenced this morning with a good attendance of teachers and friends, Superintendent Morgan presiding.

Roll called. Opening prayer by C F. Wilcox. Minutes of last association read and approved.

President Morgan made the opening address. Was glad to see so many of the teachers and their friends and showed the advantages accruing from associations of this kind. Teachers should be men and women of influence, but a teacher could have no influence in educational matters if he did not achieve success in the schoolroom. "Nothing is so successful as success." A teacher must not run in fixed grooves or channels, but hold that his ideas are never so good they cannot be changed.

He was followed by Mr. C. F. Wilcox on "What is True Education?" True education is the proper development of all the faculties of body and mind, physical, mental, moral and spiritual. Showed the disadvantage arising from the neglect of cultivating any one of these faculties. We are at school on earth and at home in heaven. Care should be taken that the education be as complete as possible.

Mr. Geddes then rendered the "Green Mountain Justice."

On "New Education," Mr. Stewart was willing to acknowledge that as yet he was only a student of the New Education. About fifty years ago a reformation in the methods of imparting instruction was begun. The teacher must understand the faculties of the mind and how to cultivate them. Pestalozzi, and Froebel, the founders of the Kindergarten, observed how nature prompted the child to gain knowledge, and use his muscles. New Education means the study of child nature, and the methods of leading him to a knowledge of things on natural principles.

The subjects for discussion were then brought up and discussed. The Association was reminded that H. W. Naisbitt, Esq., would deliver a lecture this evening, on "Education," at 7.30, in the 13th Ward Hall. Public invited. Association adjourned until 2 p.m. Prayer by President Morgan.

A VERY remarkable case of circus has made its appearance in Morgan County—it advertises no "white elephant" and is not "the largest show in the world."

"A writer in the Home Farm says: "Most soils need salt. Perhaps a word here in reference to salt will not be out of place. I might say it is indispensable to plum and pear trees, they needing from three pints to two quarts to each tree, or six bushels per acre, each year, sown broadcast, and not put in large quantities against the tree; it had better be applied at different intervals. In a neighborhood containing large orchards the owners were quite discouraged about their apples, as they were very wormy; they were all more or less infected. One of the owners resolved to kill or cure, and owning a meat market, he had a large quantity of old salt and brine. He applied it in the spring to the orchards in quantities seemingly large enough to kill all the trees. Yet his trees did better than usual, producing a large crop of sound apples, while his neighbor's were as bad as ever."
