

will stand at salute. As at Schwerin, the school children of each district will also be admitted to the platform; the girls will all be clothed in white and the boys will be supplied with blue sashes for the occasion.

Duchess Cecile will take her place near the windows of the saloon car and the train will reduce its speed when passing through the stations, in order that she may be clearly visible to those assembled to do her honor. All the military fortresses in the vicinity of the railway will fire artillery salutes as the train passes.

KAISER WILL GREET HER.

The arrival in Berlin will be a still more impressive affair. On the platform the German emperor, the crown prince, the five younger sons of the emperor, the emperor's brother, Prince Henry, and four other royal princes of the Hohenzollern family will be waiting to greet Duchess Cecile. The moment the train stops the bride-elect will descend the steps of the saloon car and will be embraced and kissed first by the emperor, and then by the crown prince, who probably will secretly resent the rigid rules of court etiquette which give his imperial father the right of precedence on this occasion.

Duchess Cecile will shake hands with the other royal princes while the usual military honors are being paid to her. The royal party will then enter open carriages to drive to the imperial castle, situated in the heart of the city of Berlin. The emperor and the Duchess Cecile will ride side by side in the first carriage, the crown prince sitting opposite to them, with his back to the coachman. The other royal princes and the various suites will follow in other carriages, of which there will be about 20 in the procession.

The state carriage conveying the emperor, crown prince and Duchess Cecile will be drawn by six white horses, and will be preceded and followed by a squadron of cavalry guards as an escort. The street through which the procession of the carriages will pass will be lined with spectators, who will accord their future empress a warm popular reception. The German empress will be waiting on the threshold of the imperial castle, where she will embrace and kiss her future daughter-in-law. Duchess Cecile will remain in residence at the imperial castle, but the crown prince will continue to reside in the palace at Potsdam, coming to Berlin each morning by train and returning each evening, for etiquette provides that he shall not sleep under the same roof as his bride during the few nights preceding the wedding. The last day or two will be fully occupied with the completion of all the necessary arrangements.

TWENTY MONARCHS WILL SEE WEDDING.

The wedding ceremony will be solemnized in the new cathedral which the German emperor has erected on the open space in front of the imperial castle in Berlin. The distance from the imperial castle to the cathedral is only 200 or 300 yards and the wedding party will pass from one building to the other on foot. They will proceed in three different parties.

First of all the crown prince, accompanied by his five brothers and by his own suite, will leave the imperial castle to proceed to the cathedral. The crown prince will wear the uniform of the first regiment of the guards, consisting of a long blue coat, blue trousers and gaiters extending to the knees; he will wear a helmet, with white plumes, and his breast will be decorated with the ribbons of all the exalted orders to which he belongs.

After the crown prince has taken up his stand in the cathedral in front of the altar the German emperor will leave the imperial castle, accompanied by the empress, the other members of the Prussian royal family and all the royal guests, who will be present as representatives of the reigning families of Europe. These will include the king of Spain, the czar's brother, Grand Duke Michael of Russia; the successor to the Austrian throne, Archduke Francis Ferdinand; the duke of Aosta, representing Italy; and the Prince of Wales, representing England.

Including the rulers of the smaller German states, there will be 20 reigning monarchs and 39 royal princes and princesses, making a total of over 60 royal personages present at the wedding. These royalties, with their suites of gorgeously uniformed officers, will form a company of unprecedented brilliancy.

A $25,000 WEDDING DRESS.

After the members of this party have entered the cathedral and have taken their allotted seats the bride will leave the imperial castle to proceed to the ceremony. She will wear a white dress adorned with the costliest lace, for which her dressmaker will receive a check for $25,000; a long white veil and a small wreath of myrtle on her head. She will be escorted by a ladyguard of 12 young Mecklenburg noblemen and attended by 12 young girls belonging to the Mecklenburg aristocracy. Her train will be borne by 12 pages, ranging in age from 3 to 12 years and clad in suits of black velvet with red sashes. Each of these pages will also belong to some family of the Mecklenburg aristocracy. As Duchess Cecile, leaning on the arm of her brother, Grand Duke Frederick Francis of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, passes up the aisle of the cathedral the whole congregation will stand and the organ will play a military march.

The wedding service will be conducted by the court chaplain, assisted by other clergymen. During part of the service the crown prince and Duchess Cecile stand side by side, the bride being on the right hand of the bridegroom. During part of the ceremony they will kneel side by side. At the actual moment when the officiating clergyman joins them in holy matrimony they will clasp each other's right hand and continue to stand hand in hand until the benediction has been pronounced on their union. The royal bride and bridegroom will then exchange rings, the crown prince placing a ring on the third finger of the right hand of his bride, after which she will place a ring on the third finger of his right hand. The ceremony will last rather more than half an hour, and as soon as it is finished the organ will strike up a wedding march, while the guns of the forts round Berlin will fire a salute of 101 guns. The emperor will advance toward the crown princess, kiss her on both cheeks and offer her his congratulations, after which he will kiss the crown prince on both cheeks and will wish him lifelong happiness. Wholesale kissing will then ensue. All the royal ladies present will kiss the bride's cheeks and the royal men will kiss her hand. The crown prince and the crown princess will then sign the register, and all the ruling monarchs and royal princes present will affix their signatures as witnesses, that of the emperor and empress, the Grand Duke and the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and all the other grand dukes and grand duchesses, dukes and duchesses, princes and princesses will follow in couples, attended by their suites, while after these will come the distinguished assembly of state dignitaries, officers of the army and navy, and diplomats, who will secure admission to the wedding service. As the crown prince and the crown princess leave the cathedral the troops drawn up outside will present arms, drums will be beaten, and the buglers will blow a blast on their trumpets. There will be quite 10,000 spectators of the scene and a ringing cheer is sure to be given as the young imperial couple become visible to the onlookers. A magnificent state banquet will then be given in the imperial castle, at which covers will be laid for 500 guests. The crown prince and the crown princess will sit side by side at one end of the central table, with the emperor and the empress opposite them at the other end. The emperor will propose the toast of the young couple, and he is expected to make a speech in which he will refer to the high destiny in store for his son when he is called upon to ascend the imperial throne of Germany.

The wedding presents, which will number many hundreds, will be piled in heaps on tables in one of the big halls of the castle, and will be inspected by the guests of the wedding party. Later in the day the crown prince and his bride will leave Berlin to spend their honeymoon at the crown prince's estate in Silesia.

After their return from the honeymoon their principal residence will be at the old palace built by Frederick the Great in Potsdam, but one of the smaller royal palaces in Berlin, which has been unoccupied for several years, also will be fitted up and placed at their disposal. The distinguished pair will possess a stable of 200 horses, some for riding and some for driving. The bride's

POOR ON $50,000 A YEAR.

The lord bishop of London is in receipt of what most men would consider the princely salary of $50,000 per year, yet he has stirred up a great controversy in England by declaring that it is totally inadequate. He has furnished facts and figures to prove that he has to make up from his private fortune a deficiency of more than $10,000 per year.

THE REASON WHY.

It will surprise most people to learn that the largest stock of Watches, Diamonds, Jewelry, Silverware, Cut Glass and kindred lines in the intermountain country is to be slaughtered just before Easter trade commences and just when most merchants are holding for regular profits, but it has always been our system to give our customers every advantage in price when the demand was greatest.

Everyone knows that we are a one price, plain figure house from which there is no variation, but now for a very short period the bars will be dropped and our select stock is offered without reservation at discounts from regular prices ranging from 20 to 50 per cent. There is a reason for everything and as it is an unusual thing for a large jewelry house like ours to have clearance sales we will state to the inquiring mind that J. H. Leyson & Co., illustrates in this state the "survival of the fittest" among our craft and we might add that "the most fit" in merchandising only survive by adopting modern methods and the Annual Clearance Sale to a jewelry store is strictly modern merchandising and gives us the opportunity to again fill our cases with new and fresh goods bought with cash obtained because of the Clearance Sale. Go look into the cases of any merchant who is afraid to slaughter prices once a year and notice the junk—we don't like junk.
