

TELEGRAPHIC.

SILVER MEN MEET.

Inflammatory Speeches and Tumultuous Scenes in Denver.

BOY WAITS ON THE WAR PATH.

"It is better that blood should flow than our National Liberties be destroyed."

DENVER, Colo., July 11.—The mass meeting called by President Merleis of the State Silver League met in Coliseum hall today. The building was crowded with thousands of delegates from every section of the state.

In his address calling the meeting to order President Merleis said: "We ask for justice, for our rights. We will accept nothing less. The crime of 1863 has gone on all these years unpunished. We are here to demand an early and speedy settlement of the silver question."

A committee on organization was appointed and a motion made to take recess.

At this point some resolved attempted to introduce a resolution. This created an uproar. Quiet was finally restored and a recess taken.

On reassembling Hon. Charles Thomas of the Democratic National committee spoke again in favor of permanent arbitration. He said: "We are face to face with a crisis which has had few parallels in this country. So deep is our war, so far-reaching that it does not involve an exaggeration to predict that the next year will bring the question of slavery even more sharply to the front. It is stagnation in business, paralysis in commerce."

This suggestion, Thomas went on to show, was from the failure to restore the old regime, the legitimate one, 19 to 1.

At the conclusion of Thomas' remarks, there was a call for Governor Waite.

The echo was taken up in a mighty shout from two thousand bungs, which was carried to the galleries, where many more joined in the shout. Major Baldwin, the representative speaker for the pro-silverites, then said: "For the present, the scene presented was beyond my description. Men whose futures depended on the cause for which they were fighting stood in their seats and yelled until exhausted."

The speakers who came from Argon, one of the leading silver-mining camps. In the seats, confided his remarks to the question of silver and its demagogic and combative by saying:

"The money power shall attempt to sustain its oligarchy by strong laws. We will meet that issue when it is forced upon us; for it is better, naturally, that blood should flow to the masses' bodies than our national liberties be destroyed. It is better to carry out the government's policy without the dictation or comment of foreign powers; if we are a province of the European monarchies, then we need another revolution, another great war, another empire. But, suppose we will send to Mexico a gallant army of British toads, according to our population, than our brothers send their sons after us."

"The war has begun—'tis the same war which must always be waged against oppression to secure liberty to preserve the liberties of man."

The address created a sensation, and a scene of great confusion followed, the speakers being deafening.

At 10 o'clock the floor and seats in the same hall, which was as governor Waite. He condemned the recent revolutionary telegram sent East by Ed H. Holden in which it was declared that if the war upon silver was continued it would result in the West regarding all its obligations to the South.

The total number of fourth-class passengers appointed today was ninety-nine, of which thirty-three were ill and vacated their places at the question of sea-lit.

Another speaker, although he abandoned his proposed principles and crossed to the other side, then, Mrs. Lewis and Mr. Fyler threw him into the gutter. He has been lying there ever since, spilling mud and bad language, can be the motive for his attack?"

"How do I know, and what's the use of guessing? He seems to lack equipment since he was thrown out of office-holding, and I suppose the man must have a living by lecturing for syndicates."

CAPITAL NOTES.

The Atmosphere Around the Weather Bureau.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—The atmosphere about the Weather Bureau has cleared off very perceptibly since the recent investigation, and affairs are running along very smoothly. The Bureau, Secretary Norton said today, is working in a more regular way. He will not say that the work of the bureau, either, shipper and consumer, has not been disturbed by the greatest good.

His forthcoming report Secretary Norton will make two important recommendations. One relating to thermometer distribution of gauges and the other to application experiments by stations now being done by the department.

MAJOR BALDWIN RESIGNS.

The advance guard of the returning forces was received with enthusiasm by the forces of Majors C. W. Baldwin and J. Stanley Brown. Major Baldwin will spend a day in Washington and then visit his home in Indianapolis. Major Baldwin believes the arbitration will be decided in his favor. He thinks that the three months allowed by the treaty under which the proceedings are being conducted, the time in which the Paris tribunal will rule, in a decision recognizing the independence of the United States will result in a decision recognizing the independence of the United States in the sense of a broad, far-reaching, that it does not involve an exaggeration to predict that the next year will bring the question of slavery even more sharply to the front. It is stagnation in business, paralysis in commerce."

The Columbia iron works have notified the navy department that the cruiser Detroit, built by them, is ready for delivery to the government. The vessel will be sent from Baltimore to the Norfolk navy yard, where she will stay until she goes into commission.

The President has directed Assistant Secretary of State to inform Baron P. Thiers that his resignation as superintendent of the census is accepted, to take effect July 1st, and in the meantime he is to remain a member of the French republic, and to serve as a mediator in the difficult over the French shore.

A few weeks ago French leather packers imported large quantities of trade fixtures, on which they refuse to pay. They have been unable to pay. The French government has demanded the payment and said to wait at section. The French admiral yesterday demanded return of the goods. The government refused and the admiral gave notice that he would proceed to a final answer. Not long afterwards he hoisted anchor and left the harbor, having attended a dinner arranged in his honor.

The British flagship Cleopatra also came here to receive the news. The admiral is to remain in the port of the action of the French.

London, July 11.—The French admiral, M. de Richard, has arrived in the anniversary of the battle of the Nile. The French admiral yesterday demanded the payment and said to wait at section.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

William Broderick agreed with Sir Richard. The Irish were both impudent and garrulous, and thereby caused much trouble. Redmond, the Irish member, should withdraw, he said.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, said that such language was impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Sexton spoke a few words in favor of the chairman's decision, but added that the person striking first ought to make the first overture for a reconciliation.

The chairman turned apologetically to Sexton. "I'm willing to do anything consistent with my duty to please the prime minister," Sexton said, "but consider the gravity of the instant offense, and your garrulousness. I have decided not to make an apology. I submit myself to the judgment of the committee."

Laud Cheesman greeted the statement, "I am willing to do anything consistent with my duty to please the prime minister," Sexton said, "but consider the gravity of the instant offense, and your garrulousness. I have decided not to make an apology. I submit myself to the judgment of the committee."

Sexton should look "such a course is unbecoming. Why am I not named and my conduct submitted to the house?"

Irish members, anti-Parnellite, should and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Broderick, leader of the unionists, said that such language was impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnellite, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Redmond, leader of the unionists, informed Broderick to say that such language was greatly impudent and should not be allowed to remain in the house.

Thomas Sexton, anti-Parnell