

LARGEST MAP OF UNITED STATES.

Constructed of Representative Growing Crops of Each State, it Covers Six Acres and is a Prominent World's Fair Exhibit.

Growing on six acres of a gentle southern slope of Tesson Hill at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, is the largest geographically correct map ever constructed.

This map is 480 feet long from east to west and extends from north to south 240 feet. The map is the main feature of the large open air exhibit by the bureau of plant industry of the department of agriculture, and is personally supervised by D. A. Brodie, late superintendent of the Western Washington Experiment station, under the direction of Prof. W. J. Spillman, agronomist of the United States department of agriculture.

The bureau of plant industry is made up of eight offices comprising vegetable physiology and pathology, fibre plant investigation, poisonous and medicinal plants investigation and every phase of plant life. Each of the eight offices is presided over by a chief, and by vote of the combined offices W. J. Spillman, professor of agronomy, was elected to have complete control of this exhibit authorized by an act of Congress. Mr. Brodie was selected to have supervision of the planting and cultivation.

The several acres were fenced off in April, and the entire tract was richly fertilized. The ground was plowed and harrowed, the soil pulverized, and the entire tract sowed to cow peas. This crop not only enriches the soil, but prevents the growth of weeds, and will render the subsequent plowing unnecessary. As the crops to be grown will be required to be planted at intervals up to a short time before the opening of the exposition, further plowing would prove impracticable. When an exhibit is ready to be installed the gardeners simply pull up the cow peas covering the space required. The ground is found to be in receptive condition and requires but little work upon it.

The monster map, in, of course, the main feature of this comprehensive exhibit, and the crop grown on this small farm will cost the government considerably more than $1,000 per acre.

A belt of blue grass lawn 20 feet wide establishes the boundary and coast lines of this gigantic map. The boundary lines between the states are marked by slender paths three feet wide. The territory comprising the fourteen states and territories of the Louisiana Purchase is marked by a white gravel walk. The states themselves are to be planted in growing crops of the principal agricultural products of the state. The center and gravel walks serve as promenades, and are of sufficient width to permit the free passage of visitor. Thus a labyrinth of passageways is created and the visitor may wind his way through the maze and see by actual observation what crops are grown in every part of the United States and how they are raised. The cereals will be the feature of the great north-west, while down in Florida will be seen growing the pineapple and orange and other semi-tropical fruits and crops. Tobacco will be a prominent feature of Kentucky's allotment, while sugar cane and cotton will be found growing in the plots of ground representing other southern states.

Not only will the product of each state be shown on this map by growing crops, but the section of the state on which each commodity is most grown will be shown. In the great north-western state of Washington the map at St. Louis shows that wheat, corn, potatoes, hay and the wild grasses that thrive in the semi-arid districts are more largely grown in the eastern portion, while in the west hay, clover, vetches, timothy, orchard hay and grasses, hops, strawberries, raspberries and blackberries are more grown. Thus on the small plot of ground that represents one great state will be found a score of different crops growing. There will be no actual dividing line between the growing crops, though in the case of the various grasses, wheat, barley and buckwheat, the line is as distinctly drawn by a wave of color as is the line that divides the muddy waters of the Mississippi from those of the comparatively clear Ohio at the junction of the two rivers at Cairo, Ill.

While the arrangement of the exhibits in the form of the monster map will fasten the eye more quickly and will challenge the admiration of every visitor to the fair, the agriculturist and horticulturist will find in the exhibits surrounding the map other exhibits of equal interest and importance. A unique feature of the government's open-air exhibit is the school garden that occupies a large section extending from the garden map over the Dominion of Canada from Maine to Minnesota. This exhibit is under the personal direction of Prof. Wheeler of Michigan, of the United States agricultural department. The liberal space allotted to this exhibit has been cut up into numerous subdivisions, and each of these subdivisions in turn is turned over to the various St. Louis schools. A class of pupils is selected by the principal of the school of the United States agricultural department, and the actual work of general direction of Prof. Wheeler. Liberal prizes are offered for the best cultivated garden and for the best results. The sight of the little tots in their knickerbockers and gingham dresses, their sailor hats and sunbonnets equipped with hoe and rake, is one too seldom seen.

There are dozens of other features surrounding the map that will reveal themselves to the visitor and will prove interesting and instructive. The new Irrigation Law, in pamphlet form, only 10c at the Deseret News Book Store.

attempt to revive them in the 20's only caused him to be laughed at, and the satire of Thackeray killed them so effectively that even "John Inglesant" failed to revive the fashion. In France they seem to have been always used more or less unconsciously for some time for a long time revolutionary, but now seems to have become clerical. Here, too, they seem to have been foreign to the soil, and to have agreed more or less badly with the character "clair de nuit" of the French genius.

SPAIN GAVE US THE NOVEL.

A sort of vindication of the part played by Spain in modern fiction has been published by the veteran novelist Senor Benito Galdos. He tells us that Spain was the first home of naturalism in literature—a proposition for which there is much to be said. It is certain, at any rate that Cervantes, although he hardly "invented" Spain's chivalry away, yet put an end to the dreary and interminable tales of the Grand Cyrus and his fellows, which until then formed the model of European romance. But Senor Galdos will have it that it was from Spain that the great English novelists—he instances Fielding, Thackeray and Dickens—conceived the first idea of irony which they afterward converted into English "humor." In France, he tells us, the same inspiration, though losing somewhat of its piquancy and grace, added to itself the power of analysis and of expansion, and caused the merely picturesque tale of adventure to become also psychological. These may not be every one's opinions, but they are modestly put forward, and as lookers on see most of the game, their truth may be more apparent in the Canary Islands, whence Senor Galdos writes, than in the middle of the literary "movement." He further tells us that in Spain itself the backwardness, so to speak, of the literary current has produced a series of novels dealing with ascetic or mystical subjects, of which he takes the romances of Senor Juan Valera as the type.

This is worth noticing, because it is curious how short has been in the other European countries the reign of the mystical novel or short story. At the end of the eighteenth and at the beginning of the nineteenth century tales properly called weird or Hoffmannesque were all the rage. Generally supposed to be German in the origin, they gave us in English one of the best and some of the worst of Scott's masterpieces, but never succeeded for long in hitting the taste of the public. Lord Lytton's attempt to revive them in the 20's only caused him to be laughed at, and the satire of Thackeray killed them so effectively that even "John Inglesant" failed to revive the fashion. In France they seem to have been always used more or less unconsciously for some time for a long time revolutionary, but now seems to have become clerical. Here, too, they seem to have been foreign to the soil, and to have agreed more or less badly with the character "clair de nuit" of the French genius.
