

should have been burned alive, had not he who afterward was my husband nobly offered his life for mine."

"Are you indeed that young girl who figured so conspicuously at the murder of Miss McCrea?" inquired Gen. Wayne.

Molly bowed.

"Brave madam!" exclaimed Gen. Lafayette; "before we leave, permit me to salute you after the custom of my country when we would honor noble ladies like yourself."

A blush suddenly overspread Molly's cheek as the chivalrous general imprinted a kiss upon her brow. A few, calm earnest words, like a benediction, General Washington added to Molly, and the distinguished visitors took their departure.

"Mercy on us!" exclaimed Mrs. Rodgers, who had partly witnessed this scene; "you are now really a captain! This is the most wonderful thing I ever heard of in all my life."

A Model Autobiography.

Paragraphs from the memoirs of Count Roptop in, each of which constitutes a "chapter."

My Birth.—On the 12th day of March, 1765, I emerged from darkness into the light of day. I was measured, I was weighed, I was baptized. I was born without knowing wherefore, and my parents thanked Heaven, without knowing for what.

My Education.—I was taught all sorts of things, and learned all sorts of languages. By dint of impudence and quackery I sometimes passed for a savan. My head has become a library of odd volumes, of which I keep the key.

My Sufferings. I was tormented by masters; by tailors who made tight dresses for me; by women; by ambition; by self love; by useless regrets and by remembrances.

Memorial Epochs.—At the age of thirty I gave up dancing; at forty, my endeavors to please the fair sex; at fifty, my regard to public opinion; at sixty the trouble of thinking; and I have now become a true sage, or egotist, which is the same thing.

Respectable Principles.—I have never meddled in any marriages or scandal. I have never recommended a cook or physician, and consequently have never attempted the life of any one.

My Dislikes.—I have a dislike to sots and fops, and to intriguing women who make a game of virtue; a disgust of affection; pity for male-up men and painted women; an aversion for rats, liquors, metaphysics and rhubarb; and a terror of justice and wild beasts.

Analysis of My Life.—I await death without impatience. My life has been a bad melo-drama on a grand stage, where I have played the hero, the tyrant, the lover, the nobleman, but never the valet.

My Epitaph.—Here lies, in hope of repose, an old, deceased man, with a worn-out spirit, and exhausted heart, and a used-up body.—Ladies and gentlemen, pass on.

DOGS AND OTHER ANIMALS.—Animals of different species, says Dr. Burnap, are capable of forming attachments for each other. He related an affectionate anecdote of this kind. When the American army of the Revolution lay at Valley Forge during the inclement winter of 1779-80, the stable of the Governor, then a Colonel in the army, was tenanted by three animals of most diverse species, but of affections the most cordial and united—a horse, a dog and a drake. No sooner did the horse lie down at night, than the dog came and lay close to his side, then the drake as invariably crept in on the little oval nest created by the dog's head and body. In this position they passed the cold winter nights, and were as invariably found by the servant the next morning. The dog and the drake became devoted friends. At the close of every meal they resorted to the Colonel's quarters to be fed, and the shaking of the table-cloth was a signal for a race between the dog and the drake, which would arrive first and get the nicest bits of their common repast. Usually the race was a pretty even one, the drake making up for the shortness of his legs by the strength and activity of his wings. At length there came a deep light snow. At noon the table-cloth was shaken as usual, and the dog commenced the race of bounding through the snow, and was soon near his dinner. Not so with the drake. He began his career with great impetuosity, but soon began to tumble from one hole into another, until he became exhausted. But what did the dog do? Did he rush on and devour his meal alone? By no means. He missed his companion, looked behind, and saw him struggling in the snow; he galloped back, took the drake gently in his mouth, and bore him off to share the meal with his noble-minded companion.
