The discovery of the cause of "divers" disease, which has been so dangerous to workers under increased air pressure, has added much to the possibilities of engineering. By experiments on animais Prof. Leonard Hill, F. R. S., has proven that the blood under constantly increasing amount of atmospheric gases, and that these tend to escape rapidly, with a kind of frothing or effervescence, when the pressure is removed. This produces varying symtoms, often serious or fatal. The remedy is gradual decompression in a specedy is gradual decompression in a spec-ial diving bell or caisson, and, while diving operations have been hitherto risky and seldom attempted beyond 100 feet, this apparatus makes it possible and fairly sate to carry on work down to depths of 200 feet.

The visibility of 85 "canals" on Mars is traced by Mr. Percival Lowell for different periods from 375 drawings. The canals are supposed to represent vegetation, and they seem to follow the water, which is believed to be al-most entirely locked up in the polasnowcaps in winter and to be released by the melting of the snow and ice a the summer solstice. The water after its release seems to have a remarkably steady flow toward the equator of 5: miles per day. The spherical form of the planet indicates a condition of fluid equilibrium, and this in itself is held to be strong evidence that the water channels are artificial.

In a recent operation by Dr. Leraux, of Paris, 25 foreign bodies, including scoffee spoons, were taken from the stomach of a young man of 22. In an earlier operation in Odessa, 35 objects, such as a soup spoon and a tea spoon, were taken from a woman of 32: while the stomach of a Baltimore young man had carried for four days 208 metallic objects, including 22 dog chains and 150 nails, with 1070 grains of broken glass.

One of New Zealand's most singular curiosities is the so-called vegetable caterpillar. Noticing a recent specimen, W. F. Kirby, the British naturalist, states that several large caterpillars of the families Cossidae and Herpialidae are known to be infested by various parasitic fungi of the genus Cordyceps, Fries, which convert the whole of the caterpillar into a woody substance, and then sprout from it to a length of several inches. The infest ed larvae, usually growing to about four inches, live like others until ready to assume the pupa state. Then the bury themselves in the ground, die, and the fungus sprouts upward, usually from the neck of the caterpillar, some-times acquiring the length of nearly a foot, and rising up from the ground, Very rarely two, or even three, of these filaments may sprout from a single caterpillar. The natives eat the plants, which have the flavor of a nut, and also burn them for use as coloring matter for their tatooing.

A Kansas dental instructor points out that the teeth, the most indestructable of all animals tiesties, have been strangely neglected as a means of identifying decomposed bodies. They have many peculiarities, and dentists could easily keep records showing the size and width of the arch; the size, shape and color of the teeth; missing an alleged teeth; kind of fillings and or altered teeth; kind of fillings and location; gold crowns, bridges, or arti ficial plates, and other features, such records would be of special value to insurance companies, often saving tedi-

The light-cures of Finsen and others call for blue blood, as blood of the or-dinary color absorbs the violet rays and limits the curative action to the surface of the body. In the novel experiments of Dr. Robert Odier, of Gen. eva, the purpose has been to overcome the difficulty by artificial coloration. Methylene blue, with cocaine to make the effect lasting, was tried by Dr. Odier, and rabbits injected with the solution acquired a blue color which remained for hours. The tissues and even the bones became so permeable to the light of an arc lamp that a photo-graphic plate behind the animal, was impressed in twenty seconds. Testing the light-treatment on animals colored blue, an immense furuncle of the bone of a dog was cured in three sit-tings of a half an hour each, and other results were had that indicate that the new field in therapeutics will prove an

A German test discovered not long ago is claimed to distinguish human blood with absolute certainty from the blood with absolute certainty from the blood stains of dogs, cats, fowls, and other animals.
