They limit His power and brand Him with injustice. They the up His hands for sternity and bind Him in guage of one of the Andaver accusers, "all men are lost to-day, who are not Christians; they must be brought into contact with Christ to be saved," and this contact must be in this life, for contracted circle of time. They consign the vast majority of mankind-the "there's no salvation in the grave sor pardon offered to the dead," and the Andover Creed declares that "the offspring of .God, to overlasting and ceasoless agonias, too horrible for any but demons to invent, not only for acts wicked will awake to everiasting concommitted in the short span of a few tempt and be burned with devils forbrief years, but for failure to believe ever." something that they never understood

Progressive orthodoxy, by which the new ideas that are gaining ground are known, is not dogmatic on the question of eschatology, but considers it probable that there may be means provided by which those who do not actually reject Christ in this life, have an opportunity of learning of Him and accepting Him as their Savior in the life to come. Professor Egtert C. Smyth, who is the leading figure is this controversy before the "Visitors" who have to try the case, addits that "all men being sinners are lost without Christ," but holds the hypothesis of a future revelation of Christ to be rea-sonable and not unscriptural nor in-consistent with the Andovar creed. Yet he does not claim that this view true theology. should be made central in systematic theology.

The case of these Professors turns practically on the signification to be attached to the obligations required of them when entering upon their positions in the Seminary. They subscribed to a profession of faith which included the Creed devised by its founders. The question is, whether or waked ap springs of thought that are abroad. now flowing in steady currents in every Is this not they have violated that subscription by adopting the views they are said to hold, and which have been set.
