

THRILLING SCENE IN A MENAGERIE.

A jungle scene, which is common enough among the thickets and forests of the "wild world," but which few can ever witness, was enacted lately at Liverpool. A large menagerie had been exhibiting its stock of feral nature, and among them two fine leopards. It is the custom of the keepers to separate the animals by iron slides at the hour for feeding, as they are especially quarrelsome at such a time. The two leopards were particularly sharp-set on the occasion in question, and the sight and smell of the raw meat destined for their dinner made them savage. While the slide was in preparation, the beasts, which had been guarding and snapping at each other, suddenly gave a ferocious howl of anger, and rushed together in combat. The battle which ensued is described as terrific. The maddened animals stood face to face with flashing eyes and jaws distended, lashed their sides with their tails, and then, springing simultaneously, with a horrible roar, they fastened their fangs in each other, and rolled over the floor of the den, locked in fight. The attendants in vain tried to separate the infuriated creatures. Tearing and clawing, yelling and gnashing, they fought up and down the cage, not in the least regarding the blows which were rained upon them by the keepers. Once, indeed, they parted, panting; but only to renew the engagement; and, this second time, each leopard caught the other in a deadly grip, the larger getting the fore-paw and shoulder of his antagonist between his jaws, and the smaller beast fastening upon the loin of his enemy. In this position they kept their hold for several minutes, mutually crunching the hide and flesh, and rolling over and over without relinquishing their grasp. After a time the iron slide was introduced, and a heavy blow from one of the scrapers used to clean out the cage, obliged the larger beast to let go, and crouch so far away from his foe that the partition could be thrust into its place. The larger leopard was already sore, hurt, and bleeding copiously from the muscles of the back; while the smaller lay gasping where he had been left. His yellow-spotted skin was rent into ribbons all down the fore-quarter; one of the claws was torn clean away from the fore-paw, the shoulder-bone was literally smashed, and the leg-bones, from the knee to the foot, were so chewed and mangled by the awful teeth of the other beast, that there was not a piece of more than two inches long which had been left unfractured. A leopard is worth a good deal of money to a showman; such creatures are hard to take alive, and it is difficult to keep them healthy in our cold weather. But nothing could be done with the defeated fells, except to put it out of pain. A strong dose of prussic acid was therefore procured and administered to the miserable beast, which soon expired in the pool of blood flowing from its wounds.—Liverpool Courier.

GOOD DIGESTION IS PROMOTED BY CHEERFULNESS.

Nothing is better understood than that there is a connection between cheerfulness and good digestion; and the trite expression, "to laugh and get fat," undoubtedly has its origin in observation, if not in philosophy. What an astonishing amount and variety of food can be disposed of, and perfectly digested, at one sitting of two or three hours, by a company of cheerful and happy, not to say jolly and merry, old friends, and that without alcohol, or any other unnatural stimulants, to help digestion. I venture to say more than three times as much as the same individuals could eat and digest in the same time if each took his meals by himself.

And this one fact is worth more than all else I can write to show the dependence of the digestive powers on the state of the mind, and to prove that he must be lean and haggard who, keeping his mind constantly on his business, bolts his meals in silence and solitude, even in the presence of his family. I commend it to the careful consideration of uncomfortable mortals who never properly digest their food, and whose bones are too poorly clothed with flesh, and too poorly protected even to allow them quiet rest, and who, therefore, envy "fat, sleek-headed men, and such as sleep of nights."—A. J. Bellows, M. D.

TRANSPLANTING LARGE TREES.—About transplanting large evergreens and half-grown fruit trees that we may get out of the way, the Ohio Farmer says: "Don't go at it as a short job that can be done some morning before breakfast. Take time and see to the work yourself. See that the pit is spacious, but if in clay soil, no deeper than is necessary to take the tree in as low as its present standing. Get half a dozen wheelbarrow loads of fine soil, such as the tree loves, and have it ready at the pit. When you come to the tree, spade a trench around it at the very extremity of the roots and then work down and under. Be careful and injure the roots, even the smallest of them, as little as possible. The earth will shake from them but never mind this. When the tree is undermined, if it is a large one put a rope carefully under it and bring the ends up and tie them over a bar. With one to steady the tree, and enough to carry it, it can then be set safely in its place. Now the fine earth should be carefully packed in; each root should be brought out horizontally, and all the fibres spread out, and thus the work should go on until every root is planted. The top roots should be nearly on a level with the surrounding surface and over them should be placed a few inches of loose soil pressed firmly down. When all is done arrange the tree with the strips of canvas, the poles, set a few feet from the tree at equal distances from each other so that their tops will meet in the top of the tree. These should be fastened together firmly and then the tree fastened to them.
