KRAO, THE APE-MAN.

Krao is the fancy name of a little girl from Siam, whose body is covered with hair all over, and who has been exhibited in London for a year or two as the "Missing-Link" of Daawin's hypothesis. The exhibitors of the child had circulated the most absurd fables about the curious creature. She was said to belong to a race of ape-men or men-apes living in the primeval forests of Siam, and to have been abducted from her parents by venturesome hunters. Then scientific cranks tried to tame the strange savage to educate her to speak, etc..

Through such fiction and humbug the English public was filled with curiosity and interest. After the credulous Britons had been sufficiently fleeced, the "missing link" (which had proved not at all a missing link between the purses of the gullible multitude and the bank account of the designing exhibitors) was sent to Berlin, where it has been on exhibition in the Panopticon for several weeks. The The Berlin savants, however, do not believe that "the moon is made of green cheese," neither do they allow themselves to be deceived very easily. They soon discovered the swindle, and were not slow in exposing it. In the National Zeitung of January 22d, we find the following by the celebrated naturalist, A Woldt.

"The first day of the presentation of Krao appeared. But what happened? Must not the scales drop from the eyes of anyone who saw this creature and heard the description pertaining thereto? This was the much vaunted mysterious, ape-like being. This brown Siamese little girl with the large, dark, wonderful eyes; this roguish, coquettishly dressed little creature whose polished manners were like those of a petted Princess, who speaks English so well, and already begins to talk German? This is, indeed, the 'missing link?' Is it possible that anyone would foist on the inhabitants of Berlin, so well known for their interest in anthropological studies, as an ape-man, a being as intelligent as the majority of our schoolchildren of the same age; to claim for that creature kindred with apes because by constant practice it had acquired the trick of bending the fingers of the left hand backwards? And then, again, its tooth formation is such as never found with the ape, but sometimes with human beings."

Another prop was knocked from under the Darwinian deception Dr. D. M. Bartels, who in the session of the Berlin Anthropological Society, Jan. 19th, defined the hairy condition of Krao's skin as a case of hypertrichosis universalis (general overgrowth of hair), of which instances are known from every continent. Such an instance was Julia Pastrana, the famous Mexican woman of whom all our readers have at least heard, if not read. A still more decided case is that of the "bear-man" Fedor, exhibited in the Berlin Panopticon, and who also shows those abnormal formations of the teeth existing in Krao and claimed unjustly as proof of her ape origin.

But the Anthropological Society had still more cogent evidence concerning Krao. Professor Virchow read a letter received by him from Dake John Albert at Mecklenburg, who lately returned from a trip around the world. In this occurs the follow passage:

"In Siam I was informed on the very best authority that little Krao is the child of a royal official well known in Bangkok. The parents look like other Siamese. The manager hired the child and the parents even accompanied her to the vessel, little suspecting that henceforth the fancy of the European would clothe them also with hair all over their frames."

Still more testimony as to the fraud was furnished by Prof. A. Bastian, Director of the Ethnological Museum, who read the contents of a letter sent to him as early as May, 1883, by a correspondent in Bangkok who is well acquainted with matters and things there. This correspondent, having received German papers with marvelous accounts of the strange phenomenon, made it his business to explode the "missing-link" theory. From his letter it appears that the child's name is not "Krao," but "Meh Khao," in English "Miss Mount," that she is of a family belonging to the household of the Siamese Prince Phraong Kamalat, and had formerly been exhibited in public for money, until she got into the hands of her present manager for money.

So much for Krao and her apeaffinity. Instead of the so much desired "missing-link" the English evolutionists have found nothing more than a curious disfurement of the human form divine. In their blind zeal to verify a fantastic theory and ridiculous hyphothesis they allowed themselves to be humbugged by a shrewd speculator of the Barnum kind, and exposed themselves to the deserved scorn and raillery of their scientific friends on the continent, to whom it was left to expose the imposition and place Krao where she belongs, though thereby the "missing-link" may remain unfound for an indefinite time to come. To such savants as the credulous London champions of the Siamese alleged anthropoid we may well apply Thos. Gray's line:

* * * "Knowledge to their eyes her ample page,
Rich with the spoils of Time, did ne'er unroll."

At all these would-be critics and correctors of the Creator's work, Pope hurled that great couplet:

"Go teach Eternal Wisdom how to rule,
Then drop into thyself, and be a fool."

A ROMANCE OF REAL LIFE.

THRILLING INCIDENTS IN THE COURTSHIP OF TWO ENGLISH LOVERS.

Mayor Edson united in marriage a young couple at the hall last Friday afternoon, whose romantic courtship, thus happily concluded, was diversified by a number of thrilling incidents seldom occurring in real life.

The bride, Miss Maggie Whallie, now Mrs. Charles Hollingsworth, a beautiful blonde, lived in the little town of Skipton, in Yorkshire, England. Her father is a wealthy man and proprietor of the Maitland House, the largest hotel in that place. Three years ago young Hollingsworth, who is at present only twenty-two years of age, arrived in the town as secretary of the passenger agent of the Midland Railroad. He boarded with a private family named Rose, and it was not long before the daughter of the house, Miss Fannie Rose, a dark complexioned, vivacious young girl of eighteen, fell in love with the handsome, dark-featured young boarder.

He did not return her passion, but loved Miss Maggie Whallie, who had been introduced to him by Miss Fannie herself. The young folks soon came to an understanding and Charles gave his betrothed £100 all the money he had. Fearful lest Mr. Whallie would object to a comparatively poor suitor for his daughter's hand they kept their love a secret, but it did not escape Miss Fannie's jealous eyes.

She began to hate her girl friend, and with her mother conspired to separate the young lovers. The two persons spread rumors derogatory to Mr. Hollingsworth's good name, and saw to it that these slanders reached Miss Whallie's ears. The high spirited young girl believed the reports and at Charlie's next visit, proudly broke her engagement with him. In vain the young man declared his innocence.

Rendered desperate by her refusal to believe him, he suddenly drew a revolver, and declaring that he would end both their lives, fired at her. Fortunately the bullet missed its aim. The next instant he placed the muzzle of the weapon at his own breast. With a shriek, Maggie sprang at him and wrenched the weapon from his grasp. She could not withstand this last proof of her betrothed's fidelity, and the young couple became reconciled on the spot.

Miss Fannie thought of another means of revenge. In some way she and her mother heard of the shooting incident. They repeated it to Mr. Whallie in a greatly exaggerated form. He forced a confession from his daughter. Armed with this he applied to a magistrate for a warrant for the young man's arrest, and Mr. Hollingsworth was cast in jail on the charge of having attempted to kill his betrothed. The utmost excitement prevailed.

The only witness to the shooting was the young lady. She had been brought into court by her father, and had promised to give her testimony. A few feet from her stood her lover in the prisoner's dock. On the front row of benches sat her rival and the latter's mother.

In a low voice, often broken with emotion, she told the story of her love and trials. She related how she was made the victim of an odious conspiracy, in which her former friend, Mrs. Rose, and her own father had joined. She had consented to appear as a witness as the only means she had to let the truth be known.

The effect of these words was electrical. The audience broke forth in a wild burst of applause and the magistrate ordered young Hollingsworth's honorable acquittal. A triumphal procession was formed and the young people were conducted out of court.

Fanny Rose and her mother retired to their home. The people of Skipton gave a banquet in honor of the youthful pair; but in spite of all the enthusiasm Mr. Whallie refused to give his consent to a marriage. He kept his daughter closely guarded and told the young man to go and seek a fortune before he could hope to become his son-in-law.

Charles accepted the challenge, and after having found occasion for a tender parting, he set sail for this country. For a year he worked hard in this city. Circumstances not only favored him, but he also received the joyful intelligence that his bride had fallen heir to $3,000 in her own right. A few months ago he returned to England and arranged with her to come to this country as soon as he sent word that he had a home prepared for her.

Suddenly Miss Maggie was missing from her home in Skipton, but the fast incoming steamship of the Guion line landed her safely in New York. She was met at the pier by her lover, and the marriage ceremony, as related above concluded the first chapter in this romance of real life The services were quietly performed, Mr. John Gibbons, a friend of the bridegroom, acting as best man.—New York Herald.

FRENCH CHARACTERISTICS.

It is a too general idea among us that the French are insincere. We have not found them so, and I think it base ingratitude in any true-born American to do their national character such injustice. Can we remember the noble LaFayette and his chivalric followers who lent their strong right arms as a bulwark in defense of our rights and to aid us in the struggle for our country's freedom, and not feel bound by every tie of gratitude and sentiment to their countrymen?

I do not dare to say there is not some insincerity here, for there are good and bad traits in every nation. John Bull is a noble animal, but he is also tyrannical and worse sometimes; Sandy leal and clannish, but stubborn to a fault; "Hans" is honest but a trifle too phlegmatic and unfeeling, and "Uncle Sam," with his many fine traits, is known to be upon occasions a slippery individual. But it would be neither fair nor wise to judge them by the vulnerable spot in their natures, to blow away all the grain, leaving only the chaff.

Take the French from a general point of view; kind and clever, chivalric and hospitable, heroic and patriotic (for I know not a single Frenchman who would not bleed and die for his country's sake), and admire and respect them for what they are. We must not judge them by Voltaire, for he was not a typical Frenchman; he had their head, but not their heart, and did more harm than they even now see. Yet their very respect for his memory shows what beautiful natures they have—ready to forgive and forget.—Paris Letter in Courier-Journal.

A BAD MISTAKE.—The president of a New Mexico mining company—headquarters in Boston—entered his office the other day to find everything and everybody in a hubbub, and his demand to know the cause was replied to with:

"Our mine has been turning out ore!"

"No!"

"It's so! Here's a telegram announcing that we have actually struck it rich!"

"Great Scots!" gasped the president, as he sank back into a chair. "What did those idiots want to go and discover ore for just as we had got ready to levy an assessment of $2 per share to dig a three-mile tunnel to drain our hole. Why, stockholders will be kicking like steers in less'n a week."—Wall Street News.

COULDN'T AFFORD IT.

Made Honest by Business Principles —A Druggist tells the Square Truth.

"Now, my friend, let's be perfectly frank and candid about this little matter," the druggist said, placing both his elbows on his plated show-case and looking his customer fairly in the eye, You have a lame back and want a plaster to put on it. You don't know me, and, judging of human nature as it runs in business, you are afraid I'll humbug you in some way. You may think it an odd statement, but I can't afford to cheat you. Even if I did I haven't the means.

"That's curious. (Oh, my back! I'll take a chair, I guess.) Don't you keep plasters?"

"Oh, yes, one or two kinds. Once I had shelves full of them—every sort that were ever invented to gull the ignorant and make money for imitators. But I sifted 'em out one by one, and now sell principally. They always give satisfaction, and in the end it pays me to sell them in preference to all others."

"Haven't you Allcock's?"

"Yes, but my customers and myself prefer Benson's Capcine—which are as quick as electricity, safe as Government bonds and sure as the law of gravitation. The doctors order them, and what is more to the point, I have never heard a complaint from any one who has used them. You can go elsewhere—if your back will bear you out in the operation—and get another and a cheap plaster, but—"

"Don't talk to me about the money," broke in the comfort-seeking stranger, with some heat. "What's ten or fifteen cents to getting rid of this confounded—oh, Lordy!—this pain and lameness? Let me have one of Benson's Capcine. That's the real article, is it? with the words CAPCINE cut in the body of the plaster.

"You'll be around in a week, straight and strong," added the diplomatic druggist, throwing the money in his cash drawer.
