der their sharters. Discrimination cannot and ought not to be banished from inter-state commerce, but un-just discrimination should be condemned. No road should be allowed to favor one man engaged in business at the expense of his neighbor in the same business. While connected with the Erie, Mr. Blanchard had allowed persons engaged in building factories and other industrial structures to ship the materials necessary for those structures at a reduced rate. This was done to encourage industry, and was, in Mr. Blanchard's opinion, a wise discrimination. As a remedy for many of the evils connected with the transportation prob-lem he advocated the publication of the rates of the different roads in post-
