Neput Ciry, March 4, 3853. I saw an article in the sixth number of the precent volume of your paper, written by H. Gibbs, which I wish to give my opinion upon. I think there which I wish to give my opinion upon. I think there we so many farming in this country, that have not had much experience, and will look to that communi-cation for a guide. They will throw away hundreds of bushels of wheat, and will have thousands of bushels less at harvest, by stunting the wheat by thick-sowing. He says, "wash your wheat in brine, then dime or ash it, then sow from one and a half to two bushels of seed to the acre to prevent smut; he also says that the suckers are weak, which is the When seed is put into the ground, start before the stalk, and there will be no more stakes shoot forth until there are more roots than are normary to carry food to the first stalks, and so on a millist gets through its growth and spreading. untilest gets through its growth and spreading. The can sowing thick prevent smul? if you sow your seeds so thick that it cannot spread, your wheat will the stunted, consequently the yield will be small.— The head and straw of smut are as large, and have the appearance of being as thrifty as thriwheat. The cause of smut, I do not know, thou a I think it is a sickness or blight that takes hold cloud the time that it blossous; the kernet fills, but it is lifeless matter; fire cause of this is what we want to find out, and then we can probably find a remedy. What good does washing and liming do, if sowing thick prevents it smitting "Another dvantage of sowing thick, he says, is to shade the ground, and keep the sun from The heat of the sun does not draw but nortion of the moisture from the ground, that thick crop of grain will do. When any thing is January 1853 says, the victor the ground the thicker it should be sown." I say the thinner; then the heads will be larger and more grains in a head. This is what makes a large cron. If wheat is put in when the ground is mellow, and harrow it in thoroughty, so that all the corn is planted too thick, it does not yield so much to the acre. Why not the same with wheat. Corn crops depond upon the largeness of the ears; the same with wheat. He says, "grain should not be watered until the first joint is set, it prevents the roots from running down." Are not all the joints set when it shoots from the kernel? I think they are. There are as many joints in short as in long straw .--When there is not moisture enough in the ground to make it grow well, then is the time to water, whether the wheat is large or small. I cannot see why watering, when there is not food enough in the ground, can prevent the roots running down, and in every di-rection in search of nourishment until the wheat gets its growth. The soil is so variable in the vallies, from the wet to the dry, that there can be no more certain way of telling when your grain and vegetables need water, than for each one to examine their
