over his shoulder when the other came in contact with an open electric switch inside the turret and directly over the powder charge. This caused a short circuit, and the fusing of some brass on the switch dropped molten metal down on the powder causing ignition.

The accident on the Georgia, however, is not traceable to any of the conditions that brought about those on the Missouri and Kearsarge. On first impulse it was believed that sparks from the funnels had fallen on the powder being conveyed to the guns but officials of the navy department are inclined to scout this theory. They lean to the idea that in the desire to make a target record on the Georgia, which was fairly on the way, somebody erred, the explosion resulted and brave and intrepid sailors went to their death.

Why don't they make powder bags of inflammable material? asked a man from a Prairie state of Admiral Brownson, chief of the bureau of navigation. With a kindly, almost fatherly smile, Admiral Brownson replied that both powder and bag went into the gun and the explosion destroyed whatever there was of the bag, and that to make an inflammable bag would necessitate the pouring of powder into the breach, a method long since tabooed.

He said to the credit of the American navy that every accident is minutely examined into, and reports and recommendations made looking to the elimination of such accidents in the future. And such will be the case with the Georgia, but all of the disaster still lingers notwithstanding.

"STANDING STONE" DIES.

There died her this week a most interesting character, an Indian, Andrew John by name, whom thousands will miss from the Capitol of the nation. John was a Seneca whose Indian name was "Ka-sten-ot" which means "Standing Stone." He was a large man, probably weighing 300 pounds, and as he ambled through the corridors of the Capitol from the house committee on Indian affairs to the senate committee he attracted universal attention. He spoke English fluently and as his tribe was a creditor of the government he was appointed as an ex-chief of the Seneca nation, which maintains in New York state its tribal character to collect the moneys owed by the government to the Senecas. For years he labored with the committees of the two houses of congress having to do with Indian matters that his tribe might receive their just dues. And for years the committee on Indian affairs turned the old man down. Finally the late senator from Pennsylvania, Matthew S. Quay, who was a student of the Indian character, became interested in John's matters as they related to the Seneca tribe, one of the great tribes which constituted the six nations and having taken a position on the senate committee of Indian affairs, as that "exact justice might be done between the Indian and the government," as Senator Quay said, Andrew John's bill against the government for the taking of lands and the interest on moneys deposited to the credit of the Seneca nation began to take tangible form. When President McKinley was in the White House he became a patron of the ex-chief of the Senecas, and gave him a letter that brought to "Standing Stone" many friends. President Roosevelt, knowing much of the ex-chief of the Senecas, and believing that their demands upon the government were right, helped wherever he could in the claims brought by the Seneca tribe against the United States treasury and the pathos of it all is that Andrew John, who existed but materially in the collection of the Senecas' bill against the government amounting to $2,600,000 and more died just a week after the government had issued a treasury warrant to pay the same.

WAS GREAT MIXER.

Andrew John was a great mixer as we understand it, particularly among the Indians, who come to Washington from time to time either on business for the Indian office or to see the Great Father. Those Indians live at a quaint old hotel near John Marshall place known as Beveridge's, and here Andrew John lived. No matter if the Indians were Sioux, Comanches, Apaches, Kickapoo, John was friendly, and he showed them the sights of Washington. He would give them a ride on the "rubber-neck" wagon or go with them to their walk through the crowded streets, and then at the end he would lead them to the bureau of ethnology, of which Dr. W. H. Holmes is chief, and take them to the photograph gallery, presided over by Dr. G. A. Smith, a scientist of note who would make a picture of the red men, posed appropriately with their war costumes and their gaudy apparel and then if the Indians were willing, John would take them over to the Smithsonian Institution to have live masks made. For a full blood Indian's picture John received one dollar, and if the Indian was willing to sit for his mask he would receive five dollars. While the Indians who came to Washington were willing to sit for their pictures, many of them objected to having the paint on their faces. The Seneca Indians for their pictures received five dollars, and if business was good, John would run in half bloods and quarter bloods and even go so far as to ask Mr. G. A. Smith to make pictures of them. He had made before, and he received John's undying. One day Andrew John presented a group of five Indians to Mr. G. A. Smith and the latter having made thousands of Indian pictures, he was in the group one of whom he believed he had photographed before. Going to his cabinet he took out two that he recognized and asked them if they were his. They said yes, and then he showed them the pictures, and both agreed that the pictures were in the bureau. Andrew John was a considerable money maker, and he was a good Indian.

CRIME IN NEW YORK.

So Much May be Necessary to Establish Additional Night Courts.

New York, Aug. 1.—There is so much crime in New York after dark that it probably will be necessary to establish four night courts instead of the one which is to be formally opened in Jefferson Market at 8 o'clock this evening.

The suggestion was made at a meeting of the board of magistrates yesterday after it had been stated that every prisoner arrested between 4 o'clock in the afternoon and 2 o'clock in the morning, in the entire 42 precincts of Manhattan would have to be arraigned in the one court and that in the first seven days of July the number of arrests in those hours had made an average of 371 a day.
