

so bad that the flesh on the fingers all curled back, leaving the bones bare, and all his finger nails dropped off. He was buried by his countrymen after the custom of their country on last Saturday evening.

Keep the Legs and Feet Warm.

During the damp and cold season the legs should be encased in very thick knit woolen drawers, the feet in thick woolen stockings (which must be changed every day), and the shoe soles must be as broad as the feet when fully spread, so that the blood shall have free passage. If the feet are squeezed in the least, the circulation is checked, and coldness is inevitable. This free circulation cannot be secured by a loose upper with a narrow sole. If, when the foot stands naked on a sheet of paper, it measures three and a half inches, the sole must measure three and a half.

I will suppose you have done all this faithfully, and yet your feet and legs are cold. Now add more woolen, or if you are to travel much in the cars, or in a sleigh, procure a pair of chammois-skin or wash leather drawers, which I have found to be most satisfactory.

I have known a number of ladies afflicted with hot and aching head, and other evidence of congestion about the upper parts, who were completely relieved by a pair of chammois-skin drawers and broad soled shoes. Three ladies in every four suffer from some congestion in the upper part of the body. It is felt in the fullness of the head, in sore throat, in palpitation of the heart, torpid liver and many other ways. It is well known that a hot foot bath will relieve for the time being any and all of these difficulties. This bath draws the blood into the legs and feet, relieving the congestion above. What the hot foot bath does for an hour the broad-soled shoes, with thick woolen stockings, and a pair of flannel drawers, with a pair of wash-leather drawers added, will do permanently. Of course, I am speaking of cold weather. No one hesitates to multiply the clothing about the trunk; why hesitate to increase the clothing about the legs? As a preventive of many common affections about the chest, throat, and head, including nasal catarrh, I know nothing so effective as the dress of the lower extremities which I am advocating.

The bath is a good thing, exercise is a good thing, friction is a good thing, but after all our main dependence in this climate must ever be, during the cold season, warm clothing. Already we overdo this about our trunks, but not one person in ten wears clothing enough about the legs and feet.—Ex.

Dull Times.

Business men are ever eager to find some way to tide over the hard times which occasionally fall upon the country. Too often they seek to "economize" by withdrawing their advertisements from the papers, in other words, taking in their sign, and almost closing their doors against custom. The Milwaukee Wisconsin relates that after the crash of 1857, when everybody was almost scared to death and the croakers predicted that the country had gone to smash, a dry goods house was opened in that city, which proceeded on the principle that in order to reach the hoarded money in the pockets of the people the proprietors must sell at very reasonable prices and advertise very largely. They worked vigorously upon this principle. Their brother merchants, who did not advertise, predicted that the new comers would be ruined, as they paid too much for advertising. Nevertheless, they persisted. In a single year they paid five hundred dollars in gold to the Daily Wisconsin for advertising, and at the end of seven years they retired from business with a fortune of one hundred thousand dollars, while other merchants on the same street, some of them opposite their store, failed. The New York Post says it remembers a similar occurrence among its advertisers during the same panic. A merchant continued his advertisement in our columns through the whole period of stagnation, and notwithstanding many predictions that "it wouldn't pay." His testimony afterwards was that his sales were steady and his profits satisfactory, while many a merchant around him, who "couldn't afford to advertise," saw his clerks stand idly behind the counters. A financial panic does not mean that no one has any money. There is plenty of money in the country, and those who hoard it are just the ones to be eager for the "bargains" which a fall in prices holds out. But to buy they must know where to buy, and the merchants who sell them will receive their cash.—Ex.

A Better Agriculture.

American farmers, East, West, and South, have relied so much on the unending richness of the new soils, fresh from nature's unfathomable storehouse of elements, and have manured so little, that now we are obliged to talk about "worn-out soils," "exhausted fields," etc., terms which no good farmer ever ought to hear, as applied to the agriculture of this country. The easy way of sowing and reaping, with no care except that of getting the seed into the ground, and that in a very cheap way, has almost spoiled our farmers for thorough farming, as we find it carried on in England, and in rare cases in this country. Farming, which once was profitable in New England, Virginia, and others of the older States, is no longer self-supporting in many parts. A writer who lately visited the home of his boyhood in Vermont, says:

"The old houses still stand, half roofless and windowless, only to remind the passer-by of a New England farming population rapidly passing away."

Farmers who are guilty of letting their farms get poor and hungry, strange as it may seem, hate to be lectured about their remissness in this particular. You may risk telling them of other faults and omissions without fear of losing their friendship or the warm hand of fellowship, but take them to task about their negligent farming, their slovenliness, their miserable crops and scrub animals, and they dislike you, and offer their right hand only when they cannot get away from you.

Talk to them about collecting materials for manure and building in every field a hill of compost, and they will call your attention to the excellencies of red clover to keep land up. Those who have been reading the New York Tribune will refer with an air of sure defense to what George Geddes has said in favor of clover as a sort of soil alchemy, in which everything is found which a soil needs to keep it up, and more than keep it up—make it more beautiful. If any sensible man will reflect a moment, if he has had an opportunity to read anything about natural physiology, or knows anything about what soils are composed of, and what crops require for growth and maturing of seed, he will conclude that no one plant contains all the desirable elements of the various crops. The notion (it is nothing more) that clover will advance the general agriculture of a country is the exact counterpart of what was entertained by English farmers in some parts of the Kingdom over a hundred years ago, and whose farms became "clover-sick"; that is, would not produce that plant any longer. Those who clover their farms constantly here will share the same fate by and by.

The average yield of wheat in England, according to the best authorities, is twenty-eight to thirty bushels; in the whole United Kingdom, twenty-seven bushels. It is not natural superiority of fertility which makes this high average; it is thorough culture and thorough manuring, mainly the latter, we believe. Deep and continuous plowings are done, the soil is made fine, very fine; under-drained wherever necessary; turnips are grown and fed off upon the ground by sheep, and their droppings make so much of the soil very rich; careful rotations, constantly and continuously adhered to, use the plant-food stored in the soil to the best possible advantage; and above all, the greatest care is used in increasing home-made manures. Artificial fertilizers are used to a great extent, but after all they are mere adjuncts to the immense supplies of farm-yard manures which are constantly made, collected, and distributed.—Ex.
