

Trade in the Policy of Modern States

A Candid and Forceful Discussion of the Principles of Traffic With Reference to Social and Political Institutions and Practices.

The following lecture was delivered at the University building of the University at night by Professor George Q. Cheney.

Trade and commerce, which by some writers are still used synonymously, have been drawing apart in economic science until a very manifest distinction has arisen between them. Trade is the exchange of goods for goods, or the exchange of goods for money, or the exchange of money for goods. Commerce is the exchange of goods for goods, or the exchange of goods for money, or the exchange of money for goods. The difference between the two is that trade is the exchange of goods for goods, or the exchange of goods for money, or the exchange of money for goods. Commerce is the exchange of goods for goods, or the exchange of goods for money, or the exchange of money for goods.
