ABUSED THE WATERMASTER.

Yesterday afternoon a complaint was issued from Justice Parley J. Hall's court for the arrest of John McCoy on the charge of assault and battery, the complaining witness being George Kalser. The complaining witness called it the office of the county attorney thoroughly soaked with water and bearing some marks of severe treatment. Kaiser is watermaster on the water ditch through which McCoy gets his irrigation water, and some time ago the two got into an altercation, and McCoy was arrested on the charge of interfering with the water in the ditch out of his turn and was out under bonds awaiting a hearing. Yesterday the two men crossed each other's paths and words ensued, followed by lows, McCoy getting the best of the fight. He beat Kaiser terribly about the face and kicked him in the side, knocking him in the water ditch. Mc-Coy was arrested and arraigned before conditions are fulfilled in their forma-tion, and the danger we ought to guard against in forming habit, is the idea, which is very prevalent, that habits are formed by repetition. The reverse is true: repetition should be the result of habit, and in that way habit becomes a servant. Habits are formed by suc-cess and not by repetition; the first activities of the child are crude and to a great extent superfluous as is illusa great extent superfluous, as is illus trated by a cliffid in learning to write when he goes through many useless and grotesque motions. So in learning to ride a blcycle and other things these movements are not continued, but the movements that lead to success are re-peated, and through the building up of the consciousness of success useless motions are eliminated, and the suc-cessful motions are presented. One are cessful motions are repeated. One ac-tivity that leaves the child with the consciousness that he has accomplished something and how he accomplished it is worth a great deal more in forming a habit than a large number of hum-drum repetitions. About three-quarters of the repetition in the school room is unnecessary and is done because we do not have conditions right for the child to do a thing right at first. Aside from the waste of valuable time in try-ing to form habits by repetition this method has the evil that a habit so formed is simply a groove in which operate in a mechanical and unintelligent way. If we are going to be able to do someable to change our habits, so that they will be tools which we can apply to new situations as well as to old. Habits ought to be formed with and through attention, by concentrating our consciousness of the success which caused the reaching of an end. A substitute for repetition in forming habit is to not have mechanical repe ition, but repetition with variations exercise, practice, giving the child an opportunity to use the thing which he has learned in fixing the habit, an op-portunity to use what he already knows n a slightly varied form.

The people to whom we are attracted are people who give their own ideas on a subject and not borrowed ideas, and the child should be encouraged to give expression to his natural tenden-cles rather than to have ideas poured into him, which limits the activities of the mind. The proper place of imitation in forming habits is not to copy or reproduce a model, as the limits de-velopment. The interest of the child should be aroused to do a thing, which may be represented by a model, and not merely to imitate the model; then the child is encouraged to exercise his powers and what he does will be a free expression of his own powers and, not a slavish imitation.

> CORRELATION IN EDUCATION. Miss Effle Howe gave a beautiful plano selection at the opening of the evening session. Dr. Dewey's lecture was on "The Social Aspect of Correlation in Education. The method of correlation in education, which originated in Germany sprang from the idea that our conduct s controlled by our ideas and that our ideas are unrelated our conduct will not be harmonious. The idea of making literature the center of school work and making other studies form a reciprocal relation thereto, may serve to correlate studies, but not to correlate studies with the social life outside of the shool. The best correlation is to connect the school fact with the gen-eral trend of the child's life; the stud-

Lectures by Dr. Dewey in Summe School-Poreclosure Suit-Bank Changes Bylaws.

Special Correspondence.

Provo, Utah Co., June 21 .- Dr. Dew-"y's lecture yesterday afternoon before the B. Y. A. Summer school was on the subject of "Habit." One idea of habit on the part of educators is that character consists of habits, and as the ob. ect of education is to form character should be the object of study to orm habits. Another extreme is the he wanted the child to form was the abit of yot forming any habits. These extremes may be reconciled by saying that, habits are good ser-nts, but poor masters; habits as sertion of the plans formed by the higher aspects of the mind. On the other band, when Rousseau wanted to minimize the formation of habits he prob-ably had the idea in view that habits are often so formed as to cause them life, such as language manual training in its less technical form, etc., should be taught in a manner to correlate them with the experiences of the child outside of the school in social life. Mankind should be primarily instructed on the practical phase of education, which should be made the basic interest from which the spiritual, moral and other interests radiate. Some objection has been made to this on the grounds that it is a too utilitarian point of view. there is no true home, however spiritual or intellectual, but what work of some kind forms a part of its life. Work is not too utilitarian so long as man's condition is as it is, and since the largest portion of humanity has its time taken up with work the school should take it up and spiritualize it. It is not the work itself that is sordid but the spirit that enters into it. On the other hand the spirit can elevate it; and a hild should be taught to realize the laws of mechanics or of nature enters into his work, and also that if he does honest work he is doing a social service. Education cannot alone solve the labor problems that confront the age, it will require social reforms, egislation and other factors, but education can give a man a conscious sense of what he is doing so that he will not a mere machine. Those educational pursuits which are not so much studies as they are active manifestations of interest in social life should be taught in a manner to serve a two-fold purpose: (1) to give a natural expression to the child's social instincts, (2) as a mode of introducing the child the social and scientific relations inolved in these vocations.

In teaching history, which is the background of human life, less attention should be paid to the military and political side and more to the question of learning how the people lived; their cientific, artistic, moral and religious ondition Education in the primary and intermediate schools should not be technical in form, but so arranged that the child shall realize that he is getting acquaint. ed with the world he lives in, while what he learns may at the same time be a fact in any of the sciences. When he gets older he can study the sciences for themselves. The aim should be to make the child apable of appreciating and sharing in the life and experiences of others, and capable of giving out something and be-ing a contributor to the social life.
