

SOCIETY

SOCIAL CHAT

The week has been filled up with more or less informal affairs, mostly in card and luncheon parties, and all of them including less than 50 guests. The event most talked about for the next week is the party ball to be given by St. Mark's hospital association, and which, from all evidences, will be the most successful yet given. Music, decoration, supper and all other committees have been devoting anxious attention to their respective duties and the details will be fully perfected for the night of the event.

A SET OF ROYAL SABLES.

Sable, the royal fur of Russia, is such a highly expensive pel that the woman who can afford its possession is indeed fortunate. In Russia where garments of sable are worn by the royalty and women of fortune, but on this side of the water, the majority of sable creations are confined to muff and stole or scarf neckpieces. This set, valued well up into three figures, shows neckpiece formed of two sable pelts, the tails crossed at the back in the back and hanging to the waistline. The fringe, coming several inches below the waistline, are weighted with the beads and paws. The muff is a large pillow affair with a single head and two paws set in the lower left hand corner over a bunch of tails of various lengths. The deep beautiful color of sable is becoming to almost any complexion, and they are charming with any color costume that one chooses to accompany them.
