In Women's World.

Roy Samuel McComb of the Emmanuel church movement in Boston, is writing about his system in Harper's Bazar. In the August number he says, among other things:

"One of the saddest features of our time is women's growing reliance on those pretended seducers, from misery and despair—alcohol, cocaine, morphine, veronal, sulphonal, and the like. And yet it cannot be repeated often enough that in yielding to such temptations women are forging the chains of an intolerable and degrading slavery, and are making their last state infinitely worse than their first. It cannot be denied that these drugs will lift the load of despair from the heart, will dispel fear and worry, will lead the mind out of the hell of unrest into the heaven of peace, but it is equally true not only that these effects are merely temporary, but also that the demons which seem to have been exorcised by their agency will return reinforced a hundredfold. Whatever, therefore, the nervous sufferer may or may not do, there is one temptation she must at all costs resist—and that is the temptation to rely on narcotic drugs."

What, then, can the sleepless woman do to help herself? Let her note, in the first place, some things that she ought not to do. She ought not to drink tea or coffee, especially toward bedtime; for these stimulate the brain. She ought not to spend all her time fluency in attracting sleep. Assuming, then, that the sufferer has removed the physical causes of sleeplessness, that noise and light and material discomforts are excluded—there is now no reason for the insomnia. She has but to suggest to herself properly or talk to herself sleep for a while, and it will come. Relax the limbs. Close the eyes. Inhale a few deep breaths, and repeat silently and slowly some such formula as this: "There is now no reason why I should not sleep. I can sleep. Therefore I will sleep. I will sink down lower and lower. I am sinking down. I know I am now going to sleep. I feel sleep coming, coming. It is here. I sleep, sleep, a long, unbroken sleep."

"To sum up, the secret of mental health and nervous balance is to be found in obedience to a few rules. Here they are: (1) Cultivate sound, health-creating emotions—love, joy, peace, faith, and hope. (2) Allow yourself sufficient time in which to do your work. (3) Hold in reserve a surplus store of nervous energy by keeping within the limits of your organization. (4) Do one thing at a time. (5) Prepare yourself in good season for sleep. (6) Trust in the infinite goodness of God, who loves every creature He has made."

With a family of half-grown children, it is often difficult to keep the gas bills within reasonable limits. We hit upon the plan of sending each child to look at the meter while the gas was burning. The steady tick-tick-tick as the indicator moved around the dial impressed upon their minds the idea that burning gas is burning money, and a decided improvement has been shown.

"Tell you about Irish lace?" said old Mrs. Moran. O'Halloran, lifting her pretty wild-apple old face from her panel of rosepoint. "Sure, 'tis none can tell you better, for wasn't it my own grandmother on my father's side that worked the first bit of Carrickmacross lace ever made in this country?" And my own mother in the bitter years of the famine was the first woman in Ireland to set her needle in flatpoint lace, whatever the neighbors may say ag'in 't.

SUMMER EVENING WRAPS ARE SEVERELY SIMPLE.

Anything simpler than the newest models in summer evening capes of broadcloth and satin it would be difficult to imagine. Some of these are cut in two pieces or gored so that the single seam is at the center of the back. Others have semi-sleeves cut in one with the garment and formed by joining the under arm seam for a short distance, but still keeping the slashed side effect. Nearly everybody prefers a suggestion of contrasting color on these wraps, and this is provided by the use of black satin collars, pipings and cabochon coverings, or by the employment of cerise, high blue and emerald corded silk finishings.

LOGAN.

Logan, July 17.—A very pleasant social affair of the week was the Kennington given by Mrs. Nettie Sloan and Mrs. D. H. Thomas on Thursday afternoon. The party was given at Mrs. Sloan's home, the rooms and porch having been tastefully decorated with a profusion of flowers. The refreshments served were most dainty. Miss Dora Wright and Mrs. D. C. Budge won the prizes in an interesting guessing game which was played.

On Friday afternoon Miss Hattie Smith and her sisters entertained a number of friends at a 5 o'clock tea, which was served on the lawn. Flowers were used abundantly in decorating, and the affair proved to be most enjoyable.

Mrs. Capt. Perry entertains at a card party on Saturday afternoon in honor of her guests, Mrs. W. D. Foster and the Misses Adams. This will undoubtedly prove as enjoyable as all social affairs which are given at the Perry home.

Miss Julia Nibley entertained a few friends informally on Monday afternoon.

On Tuesday evening the Second ward choir held a most enjoyable social in the ward hall at which were present about 100 guests. A splendid banquet was served, and all present enjoyed the program rendered.

An event which is of especial interest at present to Logan and all Cache county people, is the concert which is to be given in the near future by the tabernacle choir at which the new great organ, which is being installed, will be heard for the first time.

The M. I. A. members of the Second ward enjoyed a social on Friday evening.

NATTY RUNABOUT SUITS.

The woman who can get along comfortably in these days without several natty runabout street suits is hard to find. In fact, these are the first consideration when selecting the summer wardrobe, for the simply tailored mohair or serge coat and skirt has become the accepted uniform for weekend trips to the country, for excursions by rail and steamer and for shopping on cool days. A smart little hat is the correct accompaniment of the runabout tailored costume. Favorite models are the medium brimmed sailor, the moderately-sized turban or the close-fitting toque, trimmed with breasts, wings, quills or huge cabochons.

Indoors, but rather live much in the open air and breathe deeply the while. She ought not immediately before retiring, to read thrilling stories of "battles, murder, and sudden death." She ought, above all, not to fear the idea of not sleeping; and the fear of not sleeping will be dissipated by the firm conviction that, even though she should remain awake for hours, some at least of the benefits of sleep can be obtained by using those hours aright. One goes to bed primarily to rest; secondarily to sleep. If one does not sleep, one should not keep turning over and over, growing more and more impatient with one's self, but should impose on the mind calm, peace, and a state as near vacuity as possible.

As has been well said, "Sleep is like a pigeon. It comes to you if you have the appearance of not looking for it. It flies away if you try to catch it." If possible, approach bedtime with a feeling of indifference and learn to say within yourself, "If I sleep—well; if I don't sleep—also well, though not so well." This little lesson, thoroughly learned will have the most beneficial influence in attracting sleep.

"Limerick is made on net like Carrickmacross, and there's two kinds."

CELEBRATE THEIR GOLDEN WEDDING.

John Webster, born in Scotland, 1839, and Mary Ann Wright Webster, born in England eight years later, celebrated the anniversary of their fiftieth wedding day on Wednesday last at their home in Taylorsville. They have 13 children, 19 of whom are now living; 25 grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Both are still in good health and spirits.
