

SUMMERTIME PRINCESS FROCK.

Princess gowns of linen are very much in evidence, and provide in the long, smooth lines one of the prettiest modes used for late spring and early summer gowns. The illustration shows a gown of cream white linen of a fine quality, trimmed with taffeta Richelieu platings inserted in every seam, narrowing to a cord width at the waist, and darning to the fullest above and below this point. The yoke, made of baby Irish lace, is daintily piped with banana-colored velvet ribbon, while the short sleeves, with lace cuffs, are banded with the same ribbon. Yellow appears upon the hat as a band trimming on the white straw, with a buckle of amber holding three full white ostrich tips in place at the left side.
