

OVERNMENT REFORM IN FRANCE Y DETEW THE WEEKLY

THE brief paragraphs occasionally contained in the telegraphic dispatches in relation to public feeling in France towards the rule of the Emperor. are the wall, are an unmistakeable indica tion that the system which has prevailed there for some years past, has been weighed by the people and found wanting. The opposition to the present regime and the determination of the people, as expressed through their representatives, the Corps, Legislatif, for a free and strictly, representative government is becoming stronger and stronger; and with all the craft and astuteness of the Emperor, and despite the blood which deluged his pathway from the Presidential chair to the throne the heart must be filled with fearful forebodings of the future; for the opposition of the people of France is not, as in England, merely opposition to the Ministry, but opposition to the ruler, and none know better than he that dis prealige is failing and his power waning.

The long and despotic reign of Louis $30,000. Napoleon in France, -- now over twenty years,-has excited the wonder of Europe and the world. That the French people, notoriously so mercurial, and brave and warlike as they are mercuri- shipman, Wm. Wourtyof the New York al, should submit to one of the strongest despotisms now in existence, for that long period is something strange and wonderful, and in the future will be considered one of the anomalies of his-tory. Under the first Napoleon the military renown of France was raised to an unexampled pitch, making her the terror of Europe. This gratified the national pride, and enabled the tute to-night between 18 societies. Emperor to drain the vitals of the nation in attempting to aggrandise himself and family. But during the reign dering his child. of his nephew, Napolean the Third, it has been far otherwise. But, since 1850, the time when by the famous Coup d'etat, he violated his oath of office as President of the French Republic, and decorated himself with the imperial purple, the national debt has been fearfully increased and he has ruled France in the most absolute manner; one by one the liberlies of the people have been abridged atil to-day freedom of speech and the ress, considered by the people of this of violating the Revenue laws in relalum of their liberties, is unknown n France, and many other privileges, laimed by the Americans and British as inalienable rights, are denied to the great and hitherto irrepressible people of the French nation. There is something inexplicable in the fact, that they who have so often given their despotic rulers marching orders, should submit to this system of things so long.

The change in the Ministry is not yet announced, but the reorganization of the Cabinet within a short time is certain. Throughout the whole of this crisis the Emperor has exereised his usual tact and shrewdness. He invited nearly all the deputies of the Corps Legislatif to a dinner and soiree at St. Cloud this week, and has chatted playfully with many of them, all shades of opinion have been given expression to, and many of those piquant sayings, so attractive to Frenchmen, have been called forth. For instance, to one, by whom he had been taken by the button hole, he said, "Ah, Monsleur Buffet, you mean to take hold my coat for fear I may pull back." To a group of several with

But the result of the recent elections cide upon them. The claims will be is hopeful for the future, the signs in the political horrizon showing that the present despotism will not much longer endure.

The antipathy of the French people to the present system may be seen from the following figures of the votes cast in the general elections since 1852, the year from which Louis Napoleon dates his title as Emperor.

	Government.	Opposition.
1863		316,471 1,800,000 3,200,000
1869		3,200,000

The votes cast in the city of Paris, at those general elections show that the growth of the opposition in that city to the Emperor Napoleon's rule has been far greater than in the nation at large, as the following figures show:

852 ..... 132,006 1863 ..... 83,500 1869 .... 66,117 49,406 229,758

Facts and figures are obstinate things; there is no getting round them by any amount of sophistry, and if the growth of opposition to Imperialism in France for a few years to come be propertionate to its growth for the few years past, the most sanguine sup-· to see his dynasty perpetuated.
