ECCLIASTICAL GOWN WITH WATTEAU EMBROIDERIES.

Stoles, tabards, dalmatques and other features of the medieval mode have proven themselves to be so grateful that even the frivolous Louis XVI style are not able to supplant them entirely in feminine favor. So, some of the great couturiers, determined upon introducing the Louis models, have yielded a point and combine the well-liked medieval lines with new Louis notions of trimming. Thus this beautiful costume of biscuit-colored marquisette, mounted over shell-pink satin, has a surprise embroidered richly in a rococo pattern done with rose pink, biscuit and tan silks.

A FALL MODEL THAT THE HOME MILLINER MAY COPY.

There are so many ways of arranging feathers this year that the woman who is the lucky possessor of two or three really fine plumes should have no trouble in contriving a pretty hat. One of the new shapes should be obtained—for whatever the trimming the shape must be new—and on this wide-brimmed, rolling shape the plumes may be arranged like those in the illustration, rising from a cluster of shaded silk roses. It is important, however, that hat, feathers and flowers shall be in the same shade, or at least in two blending shades of the same color.
